Richard III (1452–1485)
The best-known account of the life and crimes of the short-lived king of England is Laurence Olivier's version of Shakespeare's play, centring on his own performance as a charming, ruthless villain. The story was also dealt with in Rowland V. Lee's outrageous but amusing Tower of London 39, with Basil Rathbone as Richard and Boris Karloff as Mord the Executioner; this was remade in 1963 by Roger Corman with Vincent Price, who had played the Duke of Clarence in the earlier version, as Richard. In 1995, Ian McKellen starred in Shakespeare's play, set in a fascist Britain of the 1930s.

Richard the Lionheart (1157–1199)
(Richard I of England)
was a king who has gone down into legend rather than history as a nearly wronged idealist. The truth may have been less inspiring. He was played by Wallace Beery in Robin Hood (1922), by Henry Wilcoxon in The Crusades, by Ian Hunter in The Adventures of Robin Hood, by Norman Wooland in Ivanhoe, by Patrick Barr in Disney's Robin Hood, by George Sanders in King Richard and the Crusaders, by Patrick Holt in Men of Sherwood Forest, by Anthony Hopkins (as a prince) in The Lion in Winter, by Richard Harris in Robin and Marian, and Sean Connery in Robin Hood: Prince of Thieves.

Richardson, Sir Ralph (1902–1983)
Distinguished British stage actor, in occasional films. Despite his splendid theatrical voice and thespian mannerisms, he was at his best playing ordinary chaps, though his gallery included plenty of eccentrics. Born in Cheltenham, he was on stage from 1921, notably in productions at the Old Vic, in partnership with Laurence Olivier, at the Royal Court Theatre and the National Theatre, where first nights were marked by firing 'Ralph's Rocket', in memory of his love of fireworks. (He once destroyed Olivier's dining room with a misdirected rocket.) In private life, he was as eccentric as some of the characters he played: stopped by police late at night when walking very slowly along the gutter of an Oxford street, he explained that he was taking his pet mouse for a stroll.

Richelieu, Cardinal (1585–1642)
Louis XIII's chief minister, doubtless a clever and powerful chap, was used by the movies as a schemer and often a villain, seldom on the hero's side. George Arliss gave the fullest portrait, in Cardinal Richelieu 35. Others who have played him include Nigel de Brulier in The Iron Mask, the 1935 version of The Three Musketeers, and the 1939 version of The Man in the Iron Mask; Osgood Perkins in Madame Dubarry; Raymond Massey in Under the Red Robe; Miles Mander in the 1939 version of The Three Musketeers; Aimé Clairond in Monsieur Vincent; Vincent Price in the 1948 version of The Three Musketeers; Paul Cavanagh in Sword of D'Artagnan; Christopher Logue in The Devils; and Charlton Heston in the 1974 versions of The Three Musketeers and The Four Musketeers.

“ To varnish our lives with entertaining stories is too petty a task for this mighty technology, too petty if it is to grow to artistic maturity. Let it, on the contrary, be allowed to participate in the intellectual conflicts of the age, let us dare apply this technology to shape genuine emotions, thoughts and ideas: to shape social life; it will be stimulated as never before and manage to change from a tool for more or less elegant reproduction to an instrument of genuine imagination. – H.R.

Rothafel, Samuel 'Roxy' (1882–1936) (Samuel Rothapfel)
American showman and movie exhibitor, who was among those responsible for raising the image of cinemas so that they appealed to a middle-class audience in the early 1900s. He insisted on opulence, excellent service and full-scale musical accompaniment to the films shown, as well as providing ballet and orchestral concerts for his patrons. He ran his first movie house in Forest City, Pennsylvania, and by 1914 was managing the 4,000-seater Strand Theater on Broadway, then America's largest, and, later, the Capitol, which had 26 million patrons in its first five years. In 1926, he opened the biggest movie theatre in the world, the Roxy in New York, which seated 6,000 and was built at a cost of $6m. In 1932, he left the Roxy to control the even larger Radio City Music Hall; but he was ill, its opening was a disaster, and his career never had time to recover. Died of a heart attack.

Rutherford, Dame Margaret (1892–1972)
Inimitable, garrulous, shapeless, endearing British comedy character actress, who usually seemed to be playing somebody's slightly dotty spinster aunt. Born in London, she studied at the Royal Academy of Music, and worked as a piano teacher; she was 33 when she began her professional career, studying at the Old Vic School and acting in various repertory theatres. The daughter of a man who had spent seven years in Broadmoor criminal asylum, for killing his father, and a mother who committed suicide, she suffered from several nervous breakdowns, fearing that she, too, might go mad. Married actor Stringer Davis in 1945.

Her best roles were as Miss Prism in The Importance of Being Earnest, Madame Arcati in Blithe Spirit, Headmistress Miss Evelyn Whitchurch in The Happiest Days of Your Life, and the Duchess of Brighton in The VIPS, though her most popular role was probably as Agatha Christie's detective Miss Marple in four films.

Autobiography: 1972, An Autobiography.

Biography: 1983, Margaret Rutherford: A Blithe Spirit by Dawn Langley Simmons.

Sanders, George (1906–1972)
Suave English actor who played scoundrels, cads and crooks for 30 years. Born in St Petersburg, he was educated in England and first worked in the textile business in Manchester and as a tobacco salesman in South America. He began on the English stage in revue and as a radio actor before entering films, going to Hollywood in the mid-30s, where his first role, in Lloyd's of London, typed him as an elegant bounder. He also played the title role in the film series The Saint, which he regarded as the nadir of his career, and in its successor, The Falcon, before being replaced by his brother, Tom Conway. He put his name to two ghost-written mystery novels in the 40s, one of which formed the basis of the 1954 film The Unholy Four/The Stranger Came Home. His four wives included actresses Zsa Zsa Gabor (1949–54), Benita Hume (1959–67), and Magda Gabor (1970–71). After his film roles, and his interest in them, declined, and business ventures went wrong, he committed suicide.

❝ I never really thought I'd made the grade. And let's face it, I haven't. – G.S.

I was beastly but never coarse. A high-class sort of heel. – G.S.

I don't ask questions. I just take their money and use it for things that really interest me. – G.S.

I am not one of those people who would rather act than eat. Quite the reverse. My own desire as a boy was to retire. That ambition has never changed. – G.S., 1950s

One thing I know – I have never encountered a single obstacle that a sufficient quantity of money could not have overcome. I have never been faced with a problem that money could not have solved. – G.S.

I have got to the point where the lousier the part the better I like it. I would find it quite embarrassing to get a really good part nowadays, for it would call forth the feeble flames of inner fires long since banked. – G.S., early 60s

'I will have had enough of this earth by the time I am 65. After that I shall be having my bottom wiped by nurses and being pushed around in a wheelchair. So I shall commit suicide.' – G.S., 1937, recalled by David Niven

Dear World, I am leaving you because I am bored. I feel I have lived long enough. I am leaving you with your worries in this sweet cesspool. Good luck. – Suicide note left by G.S. in 1972

Famous line (Rebecca) 'I say, marriage with Max is not exactly a bed of roses, is it?'

Famous line (All About Eve) 'I am Addison de Witt. I am nobody's fool, least of all yours.'

Famous line (The Picture of Dorian Gray) 'I apologize for the intelligence of my remarks, Sir Thomas. I had forgotten that you are a member of parliament.'

Famous line (The Picture of Dorian Gray) 'If I could get back my youth, I'd do anything in the world except get up early, take exercise or be respectable.'

✪ For his integrity; for his memos; and for being a Hollywood monument. Gone with the Wind.

❝ Selznick was the mogul who gave up at his peak. He said in retirement: 'Very few people have mastered the art of enjoying their wealth. I have mastered the art, and therefore I spend my time enjoying myself.'

This was not unexpected behaviour from the man who once said: 'I don't want to be normal. Who wants to be normal?'

Yet his own memorable utterances were few, and on the sad side. He said of Hollywood: 'Once photographed, life here is ended.'

And of the house which is so central to Gone with the Wind: 'It's somehow symbolic of Hollywood that Tara was just a façade, with no rooms inside.'

An unhumorous man, intense and thorough to a fault, he was a hard taskmaster. Nunnally Johnson demurred at working for him: 'I understand that an assignment with you consists of three months' work and six months' recuperation.'

His creative impulse surged through his internal memos, the length of which was legendary. Alfred Hitchcock said in 1965: 'When I came to America twenty-five years ago to direct Rebecca, David Selznick sent me a memo. (Pause.) I've just finished reading it. (Pause.) I think I may turn it into a motion picture. (Pause.) I plan to call it The Longest Story Ever Told.'

One memo which has been quoted was to director Charles Vidor, following one of protest from him: 'I don't believe I've ever used such terms with you as idiotic. I may have thought your excessive takes and angles were idiotic, but the most I've said was that they were a waste of my personal money.'

He certainly interfered: 'The way I see it, my function is to be responsible for everything.'

And: 'The difference between me and other producers is that I am interested in the thousands and thousands of details that go into the making of a film. It is the sum total of all these things that either makes a great picture or destroys it.'

And, of the making of A Farewell To Arms: 'In Mr Huston I asked for a first violinist and got a soloist. When I am the producer, I must produce.'

His final claim was to have found a balance between God and Mammon: 'I have never gone after honours instead of dollars. But I have understood the relationship between the two.'

A typical Hollywood combination of oafishness and sophistication. – John Houseman

He wouldn't hire a secretary who could do less than 200 words per minute dictation. Otherwise it would have interrupted his train of thought. – Irene Mayer Selznick

The trouble with you, David, is that you did all your reading before you were twelve. – Ben Hecht

Sennett, Mack (1880–1960) (Michael Sinnott)

Canadian-born 'king of comedy' who in the 20s produced countless slapstick shorts featuring the Keystone Kops, Chester Conklin, Louise Fazenda, Charlie Chaplin, Mack Swain, Billy West, Fred Mace, Heinie Conklin, Ford Sterling, Slim Summerville and others.

Borb in Danville, he worked in burlesque before becoming a film extra with Biograph. He founded Keystone as the first company to specialise in comedy in 1912. By the time sound came, Sennett had exhausted all the possible tricks of his 'fun factory' and found the new methods not to his taste. His output waned almost to nothing, but he was given a special Academy Award in 1937: 'For his lasting contribution to the comedy technique of the screen … the Academy presents a Special Award to that master of fun, discoverer of stars, sympathetic, kindly, understanding genius – Mack Sennett.' His love affair with actress Mabel Normand later formed the basis of the Broadway musical Mack and Mabel, written by Jerry Herman.

Biography: 2003, Keystone: The Life and Clowns of Mack Sennett by Simon Louvish.

Other books: 1998, The Films of Mack Sennett by Warren Sherk.

❝ As befits the king of slapstick comedy, he was a thoughtful man. 'The joke of life is the fall of dignity', he once said. And his analysis of custard-pie-throwing was perfectly expressed: 'Non-anticipation on the part of the recipient of the pastry is the chief ingredient of the recipe.'

He disclaimed originality: 'Anyone who tells you he has invented something new is a fool or a liar or both.'

He was firm in matters of taste: 'We never make fun of religion, politics, race or mothers. A mother never gets hit with a custard pie. Mothers-in-law, yes. But mothers, never!'

He summed up his comedy technique very simply: 'It's got to move!'

And he later admitted: 'I called myself king of comedy, but I was a harassed monarch. I worked most of the time. It was only in the evenings that I laughed.'

Though Charlie Chaplin thought: 'The secret of Mack Sennett's success was his enthusiasm. He was a great audience and laughed genuinely at what he thought funny. He stood and giggled until his body began to shake.'

Shakespeare, William (1564–1616)
British poet and dramatist whose plays have received plenty of attention from film-makers. The Taming of the Shrew was filmed in 1908 by D.W. Griffith; in 1929 with Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford, and the immortal credit line 'additional dialogue by Sam Taylor': in 1953, more or less, as Kiss Me Kate; and in 1966 with Elizabeth Taylor, Richard Burton, and script credits to three writers none of whom is Shakespeare. As You Like It was filmed in 1912 with Rose Coghlan and Maurice Costello; the only sound filming was in 1936 by Paul Czinner, with Elisabeth Bergner and Laurence Olivier. A Midsummer Night's Dream was tackled in major fashion by Warners in 1935, but the elaborate Max Reinhardt production failed to please at the box office; in 1968 a 'realistic' version by Peter Hall was equally unsuccessful, as was a transfer to the screen of Adrian Noble's Royal Shakespeare Company production in 1996 and a more conventional Hollywood version, set in the 19th century, in 1999.

Books: 1971, Shakespeare and the Film by Roger Manvell. 1994, Shakespeare, Cinema and Society by John Collick. 1994, Shakespearean Films/ Shakespearean Directors by Peter S. Donaldson.

Of the tragedies, Othello has been frequently attempted, by Emil Jannings in 1922, Orson Welles in 1952, Sergei Bondarchuk in 1955, Laurence Olivier in 1966, and Lawrence Fishburne in 1995; a 1961 British film called All Night Long was a modern up-dating of the plot, and Ronald Colman's Academy Award-winning performance in A Double Life 47 had him as an actor who starts playing the Moor in private life, as did Sebastian Shaw in Men Are Not Gods 36. Hamlet was played by Sir Johnston Forbes Robertson in 1913, Asta Nielsen in 1920, Olivier in 1948, and Innokenti Smoktunovsky in 1964. (Note also a 1972 western called Johnny Hamlet and a German modern version of 1959 called The Rest is Silence.) Macbeth is thought to be an unlucky play; but Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree appeared in a version for Griffith in 1916; Orson Welles directed himself in the role in 1948, Paul Douglas in 1955 was an updated Joe Macbeth, in 1960 Maurice Evans appeared in a version originally intended for TV but shown theatrically, and in 1971 Roman Polanski presented a bloodthirsty version with Jon Finch. One should also mention The Siberian Lady Macbeth, the Japanese Throne of Blood, and a modern version, Men of Respect, which turned the protagonists into gangsters. In 1969 King Lear was filmed with Paul Scofield; there was a one-reel Vitagraph version in 1909 and Frederic Warde starred in a 1916 production. It formed a background to The Dresser, starring Albert Finney as a Shakespearean actor in the manner of Donald Wolfit. Kurosawa's Ran was a Japanese version. Romeo and Juliet was also made in 1916, starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne; this superseded several one-reel versions. In 1936 MGM produced its Leslie Howard/Norma Shearer version directed by George Cukor; in 1954 Renato Castellani directed an unsuccessful colour version with Laurence Harvey and Susan Shentall; in 1961 came the inevitable modernization in West Side Story; and 1968 brought another expensive production by Franco Zeffirelli. (There have also been several ballet versions.) There were early potted versions of Julius Caesar before the spectacular Italian production of 1914; the play was not filmed again until MGM's excellent 1953 version. The plot was used in a curious British second feature called An Honourable Murder 59, with the action moved to a modern executive suite; an all-star version in colour followed in 1970, starring Charlton Heston and finding more action than is normally evident in the play.

Of the histories, most of Henry IV has been compressed by Orson Welles into his Chimes at Midnight, Henry V was splendidly dealt with by Olivier in 1944 and by Kenneth Branagh in 1989. Richard III existed in several primitive versions, and John Barrymore recited a speech from it in Show of Shows 28; but again it was left to Olivier to do it properly. Ian McKellen more recently provided a very different, but convincing, interpretation of the role. Samuel Goldwyn Jnr financed Kenneth Branagh's bright and cheerful Much Ado about Nothing but turned down Ian McKellen's Richard III on the grounds that it was too dark. 'The public only wants Polyanna Shakespeare,' he told McKellen.

Recently, Shakespeare has become box-office material once more, following the success of Baz Luhrmann's radical treatment of Romeo and Juliet 92, starring Leonardo DiCaprio and Claire Danes and aimed at a teenage audience, which put the playwright's name above the title. Since then, Laurence Fishburne has played Othello to Kenneth Branagh's Iago; while Branagh, following on from Mel Gibson's 1991 treatment, has filmed an uncut Hamlet 96, and announced his plans to set up a new company to film the plays. Branagh has since directed a musical version of Love's Labours Lost. Meanwhile, in 00, Ethan Hawke has provided a modern dress Hamlet, set in New York's business world.

The bloodiest of the plays, Titus Andronicus, has been filmed in a visually spectacular version that mixed ancient and modern dress, retitled Titus, and with Anthony Hopkins in the title role.

The plays have always been adapted as US high school dramas, in Ten Things I Hate About Her (from The Taming of the Shrew) and O (from Othello).

The oddest screen fate of a Shakespeare play was surely that of The Tempest, which in 1956 yielded its entire plot to that winning bit of science fiction, Forbidden Planet. Derek Jarman turned it into a punk version in 1980, and Peter Greenaway into a literary experience in Prospero's Books, with all the roles being spoken by Sir John Gielgud. Paul Mazursky unsuccessfully updated it in Tempest 82. Performances of others were put to comedy purpose in Doubling for Romeo and To Be or Not to Be.

Joseph Fiennes played him in Shakespeare in Love 98, Tom Stoppard's fictional treatment of the dramatist as a young man.

Shakespeare was impersonated, rather well, by Tim Curry in TV's Will Shakespeare; and very badly by Reginald Gardiner in The Story of Mankind.

“The privileged have been under fire for so long now that anyone who has been to Eton is regarded as a chinless wonder. There are any number of Old Etonians of my children's generation acting in films, theatre and television who would do anything rather than admit where they were educated. These days, it's a stigma. There has been such a levelling off that the world I knew has turned upside down. – A.S.

“Owing to the fact that in filming you can select all the perfect bits from your rehearsals (every rehearsal hits off some passage to perfection) and piece them together into a perfect performance the screen can reach a point of excellence unattainable by the stage. Only, you must know which are the best bits. If, like many American producers, you prefer the worst, and piece them together, the result is a sustained atrocity beyond the possibilities of a penny gaff. – G.B.S.

I contemplate the popular Hollywood productions in despair. The photography is good, the acting is good, the expenditure is extravagant; but the attempt to tell a story is pitiable: the people expend tons of energy jumping in and out of automobiles, running up and downstairs, opening and shutting bedroom doors, drawing automatics, being arrested and tried for inexplicable crimes, with intervals of passionate kissing; and all this is amusing in a way; but of what it is all about neither I nor anyone else in the audience has the faintest idea. – G.B.S., 1935

The trouble is, Mr Goldwyn, you are interested in art, whereas I am interested in money. – G.B.S. to Sam Goldwyn, who wanted to buy the screen rights to his plays.

As an iconoclast he is admirable, as an icon somewhat less so. – Bertrand Russell

“ A face unclouded by thought. – Lillian Hellman

It is to Irving's credit that, by expert showmanship and a judicious choice of camera angles, he made a beauty and a star out of Mrs Thalberg. – Anita Loos

When a critic called her 'wall-eyed', Thalberg had a renowned artist state publicly that her eyes rivalled those of any of the world's famed beauties. Another detractor observed that she had bow legs, whereupon Thalberg ordered the studio designers to dress her in long skirts and never let her be seen in a bathing suit. – Samuel Marx

“ How does Keanu Reeves work with Coppola and Bertolucci and I don't get a shot at that, know what I'm saying? – C.S.

Maybe I should become a heroin addict. Maybe I should roam the fucking streets at 5 a.m. and hang out at fucking coffee bars. You know, become avant-garde. Or maybe if I adopt an English accent and add a middle name, so I'm Charlie Something Sheen, I'll get there. – C.S.

Everybody's paid for sex–whether it's right here or just the payment associated with any form of dating or relationship. Why would a movie star pay for sex? It eliminates a lot of hassle. It eliminates a whole world that you have to deal with out in the world–or out in the environment. There's no emotional attachment, not at first. And you don't have to go out and put together a string of lies and deceit to satisfy a desire.
– C.S.

Sheen, Martin (1940–) (Ramon Estevez)

Simenon, Georges (1903–1989)

Prolific French novelist, the creator of Inspector Maigret. More than 50 of his 220 novels (he wrote some 200 more under pseudonyms) have been filmed, and in the 50s his sales reached 3 million a year. He also wrote 21 volumes of memoirs. As president of the jury at the Cannes Film Festival in 1960, he ensured that Fellini's La Dolce Vita won the prize for best film. Years later, during an interview with Fellini to publicize the director's Casanova, he claimed to have had sexual relationships with 10,000 women, who included dancer and cabaret performer Josephine Baker. In the 40s, he had moved to America for a time, though, apart from a couple of films, he was unable to interest Hollywood in his stories. He was then taking no more than 10 days to write a novel: when Alfred Hitchcock rang and was told Simenon was busy, having just started another book, he replied: 'All right. I'll wait.'

Simon, Simone (1911–2005)

Pert French leading lady with brief stage experience. Born in Béthune, to a French father and Italian mother, she grew up in Marseilles and Paris and began as a model and fashion designer. Darryl Zanuck signed her to 20th Century Fox and brought her to Hollywood in the late 30s, where she later achieved her most popular success as a panther-woman in the sophisticated horror movie Cat People, though she was hampered by her uncertain grasp of English; her US career ended in undistinguished low-budget features. Subjected to a Hollywood scandal when her secretary exposed her private life and affairs, she returned to France to re-establish herself as a seductive star in Jean Renoir's La Bête Humaine, and settled there permanently after the Second World War, continuing to make occasional films in Europe until the 70s.

✪ For relishing and perpetuating the stereotype of the fine old English gentleman. The Four Feathers.

❝ Mr Aubrey Smith has few equals in the delineation of the polished, straightforward, simple-minded English gentleman. – The Graphic

He was born to smell of tobacco and Harris tweeds, and to wave portentous eyebrows … He stands for all that is most essentially British: that queer admixture of sportsmanship, dunderheadedness and sentiment which has rendered the inhabitants of these islands the most exasperating enigma with which any other nation has ever had to cope. – Theatre World

The Bank of England, the cliffs of Dover, the Rock of Gibraltar and several super-dreadnoughts rolled into one. – New York Times

He was England, to a great many – perhaps an older England, but an England rich in dignity, graciousness and good will. Certainly no one could ever have known him, either in life or on the screen, without liking England better afterwards. – James Hilton

My God! I can't possibly act with a cricket bat! – Mrs Patrick Campbell, objecting to appearing with him in Pygmalion

Aubrey, Aubrey, don't go on the stage, think of what will become of your two sisters if their brother is an actor. – His mother

Spielberg, Steven (1946–)
American director, the most commercially successful in the history of cinema so far, who in 1994 founded his own studio, DreamWorks SKG, with Jeffery KATZENBERG and David GEFFEN. Born in Cincinnati, Ohio, he was fascinated by film from childhood, studied it at California State College, and began in television. His box-office successes, which began with Jaws, gave semi-adult treatment to what would once have been considered comic-strip material for children; although, with Schindler's List and Saving Private Ryan, he demonstrated that he could comprehend more serious subject-matter. With yearly earnings that have reached $335m, according to Forbes magazine (Jurassic Park alone brought him $200m), he is in a position to do precisely what he wants: judging by DreamWorks' output so far, that is to make genre movies that do not break the usual conventions of Hollywood. He was awarded a Golden Lion for Lifetime Achievement at the Venice Film Festival in 1993, and the British government awarded him an honorary knighthood in 2001. Married actresses Amy IRVING and Kate CAPSHAW.

Steel, Anthony (1919–2001)
Athletic English leading man of the 50s. Born in London, he studied at Cambridge University and had served as a Guards officer before signed by J. Arthur Rank. He became a local star in the prisoner-of-war film The Wooden Horse, which suited his conventional, square-jawed good looks and military manner, as did his later successes Albert RN and Storm Over the Nile. But his career faltered after he married (1956-59) the second of his three wives, actress Anita Ekberg, and moved to Hollywood. He returned to England, but was unable to regain his former popularity; he settled for a time in Rome to appear in forgettable European movies. His later English appearances were in sex films of minimal interest, and he was occasionally seen in TV dramas.

Stephens, Sir Robert (1931–1995)
Distinguished English classical actor, in occasional films. Born in Bristol, he studied at the Bradford Civic Theatre School and began in repertory theatre. He was a founding member of the English Stage Company at the Royal Court Theatre and of the National Theatre. In the mid-70s his career faltered through his heavy drinking, but he made a triumphant return at the Royal Shakespeare Company in the 90s as Falstaff and King Lear. Married four times: his third wife was actress Maggie Smith and his fourth actress Patricia Quinn. He was romantically involved with actresses Margaret Leighton and Tammy Grimes and writer Lady Antonia Fraser. He was knighted in 1992. His film career began when he signed a three-year contract with Twentieth Century-Fox ('the most terrible mistake') and came unstuck while he played the title role in Billy Wilder's The Private Life of Sherlock Holmes, an experience that led him to attempt suicide. He later replaced Peter Finch to play opposite Elizabeth Taylor in the film of A Little Night Music, but was fired during rehearsals by director Harold Prince. After Taylor claimed that the 'chemistry' wasn't right between them, he replied, 'Chemistry? Chemistry? We're actors, not bloody pharmacists.'

❝ One reason I've never chased after films is that once you become a film star, you really can't stop, because you have to be before the public's eye all the time. I wouldn't care for that. Also, in films the material can't be that good all the time. You have to make mostly bad films, or films that aren't frightfully good. That wouldn't interest me – not that I've ever been offered the opportunity. – R.S.

Film acting is difficult to do properly. I remember I once said to George Cukor that I think it's as difficult to be Spencer Tracy as it is to be Laurence Olivier. He said, wrong, it's much more difficult to be Spencer Tracy. – R.S.

Anybody who's been through a divorce will tell you that at one point in their life they've thought of murder. No one's innocent. – O.S.

If it sometimes seems that all Hollywood is striving for the Op-Ed-page prominence that Stone has so quickly achieved, he is not necessarily the representative it would have picked. For the off-camera Stone is given to tirades and bad language, to strenuous womanizing and long, intoxicated journeys into the night. – Stephen Schiff, New Yorker

A Saturday night with Oliver after a long week is basically pagan Rome, 26 A.D. – Robert Downey Jnr

❝ I've been at this so long that I knew everyone in the business long before I became famous, and I didn't have value to many of them. She is incredibly stylish and sophisticated in a somewhat self-conscious way, as if she has watched a catalogue of Grace Kelly movies a little too closely. – Richard E. Grant

When I suggest that Ireland is also a country of depressed and brooding writers, she is prompted to gush about one of her favorite 'Irish' authors. 'I have to say, Dylan Thomas just cuts me to the bone!' – Lloyd Grove, Vanity Fair

The Stooges
A trio of American knockabout comics specializing in a peculiarly violent form of slapstick. They originally went from vaudeville to Hollywood with Ted Healy (as Ted Healy and his Stooges) but broke away to become world-famous in hundreds of two-reelers throughout the 30s, 40s and 50s. The original trio were Larry Fine (1911–1975), Moe Howard (1895–1975) and his brother Jerry (Curly) Howard (1906–1952). In 1947 Curly was replaced by yet another brother, Shemp Howard (Samuel Howard) (1891–1955). On Shemp's death he was replaced by Joe Besser, who in 1959 was replaced by Joe de Rita (1910–1993). Towards the end of their popularity the Stooges appeared in a few features. Although during their career the rights to the Three Stooges were vested in Moe Howard, a court hearing in 1996 decided that the rights were now owned by the heirs of Larry Fine and Joe de Rita. As a result, there were plans for Columbia to make a feature film on the trio's lives.

Stoppard, Sir Tom (1937–) (Tomás Straüsler)
Czechoslovakian-born playwright and occasional screenwriter, in England. Born in Zlin, he arrived in England via Singapore in the mid-40s and worked as a journalist until the early 60s, when he began writing plays for radio and television. His Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead in the mid-60s brought him theatrical success, as did later plays produced at the National Theatre and the Royal Shakespeare Company, notable for their verbal wit, wordplay and teasing of theatrical conventions. His screenwriting has been less original; he worked uncredited on the screenplays for the Indiana Jones movies. He was knighted in 1997. Married twice, he was romantically involved with actress Felicity KENDAL.

Streisand, Barbra (1942–)
Ambitious American singer, actress, producer and director, who made a virtue of her unusual looks. Born in Brooklyn, New York, she began in the theatre and opened her movie career by repeating her show-stopping role in the Broadway musical Funny Girl. From the mid-70s she started to take greater control of her career by producing and directing her own films; but her choice of material has been erratic and she sometimes concentrates on her own performance to the detriment of the film as a whole. Married actor Elliott Gould (1963–71) and, in 1998, actor James Brolin; she was romantically involved with producer Jon Peters. She is the mother of actor Jason Gould.

Biography: 1982, Streisand: The Woman and the Legend by James Spada with Christopher Nickens. 1994, Her Name Is Barbra by Randall Riese. 1995, Streisand: The Intimate Biography by James Spada. 1996, Streisand: It Only Happens Once by Anne Edwards.

✪ For being the wonder boy of the early 40s, with his unique blend of sophisticated comedy and pratfall farce. Sullivan's Travels.

❝ The Breughel of American comedy directors … the absurdity of the American success story was matched by the ferocity of the battle of the sexes … Lubitsch treated sex as the dessert of a civilized meal of manners. Sturges, more in the American style, served sex with all the courses. – Andrew Sarris, 1968

Jesus, he was a strange guy. Carried his own hill with him, I tell you. – Frank Capra

There was a desperate, hectic quality to all his films – an intense desire to believe all the Horatio Alger ideals often associated with America, intermingled with a cynical 'European' view of those ideals. – James Ursini

He has restored to the art of the cinema a certain graphic velocity it has missed since the turmoil of Mack Sennett's zanies. – Bosley Crowther

Preston is like a man from the Italian Renaissance – he wants to do everything at once. – James Agee

He was too large for this smelly resort, and the big studios were scared to death of him. A man who was a triple threat kept them awake nights, and I'm positive they were waiting for him to fall on his face so they could pounce and devour this terrible threat to their stingy talents. They pounced, and they got him, good. But he knew the great days when his can glowed like a port light from their kissing it. – Earl Felton

When the last dime is gone, I'll sit on the curb outside with a pencil and a ten-cent notebook, and start the whole thing over again. – P.S., 1957

“ I write for women who read me in the goddam subways on the way home from work. I know who they are, because that's who I used to be … But here's the catch. All the people they envy in my books, the ones who are glamorous, or beautiful, or rich, or talented – they have to suffer, see, because that way the people who read me can get off the subway and go home feeling better about their own crappy lives. – J.S.

The 1960s will be remembered for three people: me, Andy Warhol and the Beatles. – J.S.

She had a miserable life. But she was determined to be famous. She willed herself to be famous. That's what she wanted. She was a failed actress, a failed gameshow host. She was a sort of a joke until the novels. – Andrew Bergman

Suzuki, Seijun (1923–)
Japanese director. Born in Tokyo, he worked as an assistant to various directors before becoming a director himself with the Nikkatsu studio in the mid 1950s, making films in many different genres. He began to attract notice in the early 60s with the thriller Youth of the Beast/Yaju No Seishun and developed a cult following for his individual, blackly humorous action movies and 'pink' erotic films, that subverted their genres. In 1967 he took legal action after being fired by Nikkatsu, whose executives found his Branded to Kill incomprehensible, and, unable to obtain work in films, turned to television. He re-emerged in the 80s as an independent director with work aimed more at an art house audience.

“ Violence in the movies? It's fun, it's one of the coolest, funnest things for me to watch. – Q.T.

I've got so many movies I would like to make. I've got my western, my World War II bunch of guys on a mission, my spaghetti western, my horror film. But since I know I won't live long enough to do all the movies I want to do, with every movie the goal is to wipe out as many as I can. – Q.T.

I don't make movies for America. I make movies for planet Earth. – Q.T.

Taylor, Laurette (1884–1946) (Laurette Cooney)

American leading actress of the stage who filmed her great success, Peg o' My Heart, which had been written for her by her second husband, J. Hartley Manners. She remained in Hollywood to make only two more films, also based on his plays. Born in New York, she began as a child in vaudeville and was regarded by many as America's greatest actress, despite her preference for sentimental dramas. George Cukor attempted to interest her in returning to films, but by the 30s she was an alcoholic and unreliable; he also tried to make a biopic of her life, starring Judy Garland. A year before her death, she made a triumphant return to Broadway in Tennessee Williams's The Glass Menagerie. She had a brief affair with King Vidor, who directed her in her first two films, and her attraction to actor John Gilbert led to the break-up of his marriage to actress Leatrice Joy. Noël Coward took her, and her way of life, as the model for actress Judith Bliss and her family in his play Hay Fever.

Taylor, Robert (1911–1969) (Spangler Arlington Brugh)

Handsome, durable and hard-working American leading man. His boyish good looks turned rather set and grim in middle age, but he remained a star. Born in Filley, Nebraska, he studied at Doane University. He then followed his cello teacher to study at Pomona College, California, where he began acting and was encouraged to join MGM's acting school before signing a seven-year contract with the studio at $35 a week, which is said to have made him the lowest-paid actor in the history of Hollywood; he remained at MGM for 24 years. After some unmemorable roles, he became a star in Magnificent Obsession, appealing especially to women; his exceptional good looks were said to alienate many men, though they won him a gay following. In 1936 he was the top male star, seen in a succession of romantic parts, but he found constant newspaper references to his 'pretty boy' looks hard to bear. His defining roles were as Bobby Merrick in Magnificent Obsession, Armand Duvall in Camille, Roy Cronin in Waterloo Bridge, the title role in Ivanhoe, and as Sir Lancelot in Knights of the Round Table. In the late 40s, he was one of the first friendly witnesses to testify to HUAC about Communist infiltration in Hollywood, complaining that he had been forced to make Song of Russia. Married actresses Barbara Stanwyck (1939–51) and, in 1959, Ursula Theiss. He was romantically involved with actresses Virginia Bruce, Irene Harvey, Lia DiLeo, Virgina Grey, and Eleanor Parker. Died of cancer.

Taylor, Sam (1895–1958)

American director and screenwriter. Born in New York City and educated at Fordham University, he went into films as a writer straight from college and worked on many of Harold Lloyd's comedies in the 20s. He is remembered chiefly for allegedly having a credit in the 1928 Mary Pickford-Douglas Fairbanks version of The Taming of the Shrew: 'By William Shakespeare, with additional dialogue by Sam Taylor,' though in fact the credit reads, 'Adapted and Directed By Sam Taylor.' After retiring from films he wrote an admired detective novel The Man With My Face in the mid-50s.

Taylor, William Desmond (1827–1922) (William Deane-Tanner)

Anglo-Irish-born director in America, remembered mainly as a victim of an unsolved murder. A former actor, he worked in Hollywood from 1915 and directed several of Mary Pickford's early movies. He was shot to death at his apartment; the ensuing scandal ruined the careers of Mabel Normand and Mary Miles Minter, two stars who had visited him on his last night.

Speculation continues over the identity of his killer. According to director King Vidor, it was Minter's mother, Charlotte Shelby, who was enraged by Desmond's seduction of her daughter or, possibly, in love with him herself. Other suspects have ranged from Normand to drug dealers whom Taylor was trying to run out of Hollywood, Mack Sennet, who is said to have blamed Taylor for introducing Normand to drugs, Taylor's homosexual butler or his absconding valet, a convicted embezzler who had robbed his employer. A newsletter, Taylorology, (http://www.silent-movies.com/Taylorology/) was devoted to discussing the murder and allied matters in 96 issues until December, 2000.

Thalberg, Irving (1899–1936)
American producer, MGM's boy wonder of the early 30s, responsible for the literary flavour of films like The Barretts of Wimpole Street 34, Mutiny on the Bounty 35, Romeo and Juliet 36; also for hiring the Marx Brothers. Born in Brooklyn, New York, he studied at New York University and began as secretary to Carl Laemmle at the Universal Film Company, first working in New York and then in Hollywood where he became a producer. He moved to work for Louis B. Mayer, remaining as a power behind the throne when Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer was formed. Married actress Norma Shearer in 1927. Physically weak because of a congenital heart condition, he died from pneumonia. He was the inspiration for Monroe Stahr in F. Scott Fizgerald's novel The Last Tycoon. He was played by Robert Evans in the Lon Chaney biopic A Man of a Thousand Faces 57.

Biography: 1969, Thalberg by Bob Thomas. 1976, Mayer and Thalberg by Samuel Marx. 1994, Thalberg: The Last Tycoon and the World of MGM by Roland Flamini.

❝ When a man dies young, he is often underestimated. Thalberg has been lucky: the reverse proved true. Head of Universal production at 21 and of MGM at 25, his quiet efficiency and stubborn enthusiasm, coupled with his scholarly air, made him a legend even before his untimely death at 37. As early as 1925 F. L. Collins wrote: 'Wherever Thalberg sits is always the head of the table.'

He had apparently high aims: 'I believe that although the motion picture may not live forever as a work of art, except in a few instances, it will be the most efficient way of showing posterity how we live now.'

He was modest enough to keep his name off the credits of his films: 'If you are in a position to give credit, you don't need it.'

Charles MacArthur said: 'Entertainment is Thalberg's God. He's content to serve Him without billing, like a priest at an altar or a rabbi under the scrolls.'

He was a shrewd film-maker: 'Movies aren't made, they're remade.'

And he always had an eye for the box office. His idea of a good tag-line was: 'Ladies, have you had a good cry lately? See Imitation of Life and cry unashamedly.'

And he once said to Cedric Hardwicke: 'We should all make a killing in this business: there's so much money in the pot.'

Mickey Rooney had his doubts: 'It seemed to me that he went out of his way to put his wife into films she didn't need and wasn't right for.'

But the screenwriters were suspicious of him: 'He's too good to last. The lamb doesn't lie down with the lion for long. – Charles MacArthur

I seriously began to question whether Thalberg ever existed, or whether he might not be a solar myth or a deity concocted by the front office to garner prestige. – S. J. Perelman

I think I may have once told you Irving Thalberg's classic: 'The writer? The writer is a necessary evil.' – S. J. Perelman

On a clear day you can see Thalberg. – George S. Kaufman'

When he died however it was Charles MacArthur who knew the truth: 'Ten years of 16-hours-a-day work had tired him. He didn't know how to rest, or play, or even breathe without a script in his hands.'

Thesiger, Ernest (1879–1961)
Witty, skeletal, slightly sinister aristocratic English character actor, adept at high comedy. Born in London, he was educated at Marlborough College and the Slade, and was on stage from 1909, later creating the role of the Dauphin in George Bernard Shaw's St Joan. He was also an accomplished watercolour artist, embroiderer and author of books on the subject, and used to do crochet-work with his great friend, 'dear Queen Mary', on whom he is said to have modelled his appearance in later life. He was given to camp gestures: he used to lay lilies at the feet of a handsome doorman at the Savoy Hotel; he enlisted as a private in the First World War, hoping to serve with a Scottish regiment as he fancied wearing a kilt. His best film performances were as Horace Femm in The Old Dark House and as Dr Pretorius in The Bride of Frankenstein, both directed by his friend and former fellow-actor James WHALE.

He also published books on embroidery.

Born in Kiev, he studied under Stanislavsky at Moscow's Academy of Dramatic Art and, after a brief period as an actor, turned to directing in 1914, leaving to live in France in 1919, where he also worked as an assistant director on Abel Gance's epic Napoleon. He went to the USA to work for MGM in 1928, hired to direct After Midnight, starring Norma Shearer. But he complained to producer Irving Thalberg that she was cross-eyed, not knowing that Thalberg was about to marry her. He was taken off the picture and banished to the inhospitable Mojave Desert to direct a western; he never worked in America again. He was sometimes credited as Wenceslaw Tourjansky. Married Russian actress Nathalie Kovanko.

❝ When I was a kid, I noticed four things about movies: the characters could always find parking spaces at every hour of the day and night, they never got change in restaurants, and husbands and wives never slept in the same bed. Women went to sleep with their make-up on and woke with it unmussed. I thought to myself, I'm never going to do that. – R.T.

Tracy, Spencer (1900–1967)
Distinguished American actor with stage experience from 1922; exclusively on screen from 1930. His uneven features gained him gangster roles to begin with, then he made a corner in priests and friends of the hero; but his chief mature image was that of a tough, humorous fellow who was also a pillar of integrity.

Biography: 1970, Spencer Tracy by Larry Swindell. 1973, Tracy and Hepburn by Garson Kanin.

❂ For superb performances and for the utter reliability of his on-screen personality, which was so at odds with the insecurity of his private psyche. Inherit the Wind.

❝ The guy's good. There's nobody in the business who can touch him, and you're a fool to try. And the bastard knows it, so don't fall for that humble stuff! –

This tribute came from Clark Gable, who suffered from co-starring with Tracy in several MGM movies of the 30s. On the other hand, Katharine Hepburn once said: 'I think Spencer always thought that acting was a rather silly way for a man to make a living.'

She also caught his essential strength: 'He's like an old oak tree, or the summer, or the wind. He belongs to the era when men were men.'

But Hepburn was exposed to his aggressive wit when they met in 1941 to make Woman of the Year: 'I'm afraid I'm a little tall for you, Mr Tracy.

– Don't worry, I'll soon cut you down to my size.'

He ranged from supreme self-confidence to abject despair. In 1931 he complained: 'This mug of mine is as plain as a barn door. Why should people pay thirty-five cents to look at it?'

He remembered: 'There were times when my pants were so thin, I could sit on a dime and know if it was heads or tails.'

Later he wondered at his own success: 'The physical labour actors have to do wouldn't tax an embryo.'

Perhaps this puzzlement was responsible for his attitude to the press: 'Write anything you want about me. Make up something. Hell, I don't care.'

But he did care, and he cared about his work. Perhaps Humphrey Bogart best summed up his appeal: 'Spence is the best we have, because you don't see the mechanism at work.'

Valentino, Rudolph (1895–1926) (Rodolpho Guglielmi de Valentina d'Antonguolla)
Italian-born leading man in Hollywood, the great romantic idol of the 20s. Born in Castellaneta, he arrived in New York in 1913, after having tried various occupations in Italy and France, and became a taxi dancer and escort. His ability as a dancer provided work in nightclubs and theatres before he moved to Hollywood in 1917 as a bit player. After his breakthrough role in The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse, he married actress Jean Acker, though the marriage was never consummated. His career declined under the guidance of his second wife Natacha Rambova; while women swooned at his screen performances, journalists complained of his increasing effeminancy. His lovers included cinematographer Paul Ivano. His sudden death caused several suicides and his funeral was a national event. There have been two films called Valentino. Anthony Dexter played him in 1951, Rudolf Nureyev in 1977. A TV movie, The Legend of Valentino, appeared in 1975 with Franco Nero.

❝ His acting is largely confined to protruding his large, almost occult eyes until the vast areas of white are visible, drawing back the lips of his wide, sensuous mouth to bare his gleaming teeth, and flaring his nostrils. –

Thus Adolph Zukor's famous put-down; but Valentino's simple technique was very effective on female audiences the world over. Yet in the year of his death, 1926, he wrote: 'A man should control his life. Mine is controlling me.'

An editorial in the Chicago Tribune attacked him, asking 'When will we be rid of all these effeminate youths, pomaded, powdered, bejeweled and bedizened, in the image of Rudy–that painted pansy?'

And H. L. Mencken summed him up: 'He was essentially a highly respectable young man; his predicament touched me. Here was one who was catnip to women … he had youth and fame … and yet he was very unhappy.'

Vertov, Dziga (1896–1954) (Denis Kaufman)
Russian director of pioneering documentaries, and film theorist. Born in Bialystok in what was then Russian Poland, he studied music in his home town and medicine at St. Petersburg. A poet, novelist and writer, he adopted the psuedonym of Dziga Vertov, which can be translated as 'spinning top'. He began by working on newsreels before forming his own group with his wife, film editor Elizaveta Svilova, and his brother Mikhail Kaufman, who was his cameraman. In the early 20s, the group produced Kino-Pravda, a series of short documentaries in which he developed his theories of film montage. He also wrote manifestos championing documentary over fictional films and his belief in the film camera as a medium for providing a superior perception of the world. He fell out of favour with the Soviet authorities in the 30s and in his last years edited officially approved newsreels. He was the brother of cinematographer Boris Kaufman.

❝ As I now move, graciously, I hope, toward the door marked Exit, it occurs to me that the only thing I ever really liked to do was go to the movies. Naturally, Sex and Art always took precedence over the cinema. Unfortunately, neither ever proved to be as dependable as the filtering of present light through that moving strip of celluloid which projects past images and voices onto a screen. – G.V.

To write a script today means working for a committee of people who know nothing about movies, as opposed, say, to real estate or the higher art of bookkeeping. – G.V., 1996

❝ The difference between me and Lubitsch is that he shows you the king on the throne and then he shows you the king in his bedroom. I show you the king in his bedroom first. Then when you see him on the throne you have no illusions about him. – E.V.S.

When I first saw Von Stroheim at the wardrobe tests, I clicked my heels and said, 'Isn't it ridiculous, little me directing you, when you were always ten years ahead of your time?' And he replied, 'Twenty.' – Billy Wilder, 1942

As to directing his own performance, Von always had an assistant to give him an opinion of his acting. Whether he listened to it or not was another matter. – William Daniels

One of the cinema's great enigmas … he conjured up a world very much in its infancy psychologically. It was a grotesque and brutal world, and the bleakness and callousness of his characters' lives were revealed with a meticulous realism. – Claire Johnston

He wanted to resemble the Marquis de Sade. He had dreams of boundless luxury, perverse women, flagellation, sexual exploits, bacchanalia and drinking bouts. – Jean Renoir

He was a short man, almost squat, with a vulpine smirk that told you, as soon as his image flashed on to the screen, that no wife or bankroll must be left unguarded. – S.J. Perelman

Weegee (1899–1968) (Arthur Fellig)
Brash Austrian-born American news photographer noted for his often snatched and sensational night-time photographs, taken by flashlight on the streets of New York, of fires, gangsters, suicides, the victims of murderers and muggers, socialites, and lowlife. His book Naked City, published in 1945, was bought by Universal and resulted in Jules Dassin's film of the same name in 1948 ('There are eight million stories in the naked city. This has been one of them …'). His stark, high-contrast style can be said to have shaped the look of film noir and also influenced cinematographer Michael Chapman's work in Raging Bull. In 1948 he made a short film, Weegee's New York, worked briefly in Hollywood as a consultant, and played cameos in several films including Every Girl Should Be Married 48 and The Set-Up 49. He was a consultant and stills photographer on Dr Strangelove. A documentary about his work, The Naked Eye, was made in 1957. He was also the model for the photographer-hero of The Public Eye 92, directed by Howard Franklin. His nickname derived from his ability to be first on the scene of a tragedy, which was attributed to his use of a ouija board, but was more to do with the police radio he kept in his car-cum-office.

Welles, Orson (1915–1985)
Ebullient American actor-writer-producer-director with stage and radio experience (in 1938 he panicked the whole of America with a vivid radio version of The War of the Worlds). His extravagance and unconventionality in Hollywood forced him to Europe, where his projects continued interesting and ambitious but generally undisciplined; he never again achieved the standard of his first two films. The second of his three wives was actress Rita Hayworth (1943–48). A documentary, Orson Welles: One-Man Band, released in 1995, contains scenes from his uncompleted Don Quixote as well as TV interviews. He was played by Angus MacFadyen in Cradle Will Rock 99.

✪ For starting as big as could be, and not minding about the inevitable tailing-off (and even encouraging it). Citizen Kane.

❝ There, but for the grace of God, goes God. –

So snapped Herman Mankiewiez during the making of Citizen Kane. There must have been something infuriatingly godlike about Orson the young Messiah from New York, brought out with his troupe to play with what he called: 'The biggest toy train set any boy ever had.'

Unfortunately, as he later admitted. 'I started at the top and worked down.'

It was indeed the only way to go: he could not, either by temperament or ability, make the films Hollywood wanted. The end of his reign came when: 'They let the studio janitor cut The Magnificent Ambersons in my absence.'

The years that followed saw an amassment of unfinished projects and haphazard wanderings over Europe, with flashes of acting genius in between. Paul Holt called him: 'The oldest enfant terrible in the world.'

Jean Cocteau saw him as: 'An active loafer, a wise madman.'

Ken Tynan called him: 'A superb bravura director, a fair bravura producer, and a limited bravura writer; but an incomparable bravura personality.'

John Simon opined: 'The sad thing is that he has consistently put his very real talents to the task of glorifying his imaginary genius.'

Charles Higham adds a reason: 'His genius fed on Hollywood's marvellous machinery.'

Pauline Kael was revolted: 'By the 60s he was encased in make-up and his own fat, like a huge operatic version of W. C. Fields.'

Perhaps he best summed up his own career: 'Everybody denies I am a genius – but nobody ever called me one!'

By 1982 the Sunday Times would state: 'His talents now seem as deeply buried as a sixpence in a Christmas pudding.', Gluttony is not a secret vice. – O.W.

I'm not bitter about Hollywood's treatment of me, but over its treatment of Griffith, Von Sternberg, Von Stroheim, Buster Keaton and a hundred others. – O.W.

When you're down and out, something always turns up – usually the noses of your friends. – O.W.

Movie directing is a perfect refuge for the mediocre. – O.W.

There is nothing about him to convince us that he has ever felt humility or love anywhere but in front of a mirror. – John Simon

Famous line (Citizen Kane) 'I run a couple of newspapers. What do you do?'

Famous line (The Third Man) 'In Italy for thirty years under the Borgias they had warfare, terror, murder, bloodshed – they produced Michelangelo, Leonardo da Vinci and the Renaissance. In Switzerland they had brotherly love, five hundred years of democracy and peace, and what did that produce? The cuckoo clock.'

✪ For enjoying the sensations she caused in the 30s, and for having the talent to exploit them to the full. She Done Him Wrong.

“ Whole books of Mae West's wit have been published. A much cleverer woman than she was usually given credit for being, she seemed to talk in epigrams. In her 70s on TV, when someone gushed: 'Oh, Miss West, I've heard so much about you', the reply was: 'Yeah, but you can't prove a thing.'

When a lifejacket was named after her during World War II, her reaction had the appearance of spontaneity: 'I've been in Who's Who and I know what's what, but it's the first time I ever made the dictionary.'

However, she never did say: 'Come up and see me sometime ...'

At least, not quite, and not in the film she was supposed to. She did however say: 'Beulah, peel me a grape', which for some reason has passed into the language. Her first screen appearance is also legendary: 'Goodness, what beautiful diamonds!

– Goodness had nothing to do with it, dearie.'

For the rest, one can only list a few sparklers: 'She's one of the finest women who ever walked the streets.',

It's not the men in my life, it's the life in my men that counts. –

I wouldn't let him touch me with a ten foot pole. –

How tall are you son?

– Ma'am, I'm six feet seven inches.

Let's forget the six feet and talk about the seven inches. –

On arriving at her office and being greeted by a score of virile young men: 'I'm feeling a little tired today. One of those fellows'll have to go home.'

In a Broadway costume play, when the romantic lead got his sword so tangled in his braid that it stuck up at an unfortunate angle: 'Is that your sword, or are you just pleased to see me?',

I wouldn't even lift my veil for that guy. –

When I'm good I'm very good, but when I'm bad I'm better. –

It isn't what I do, but how I do it. It isn't what I say, but how I say it. And how I look when I do it and say it. –

On the mirrored ceiling over her bed: 'I like to know what I'm doing.', Whenever I'm caught between two evils, I take the one I've never tried. –

Small wonder that her first co-star, George Raft, remarked of her debut: 'She stole everything but the cameras.'

In a non-permissive age, she made remarkable inroads against the taboos of her day, and did so without even lowering her neckline. Indeed, her most effective moment may have been in a scene in which she drove a funfair crowd wild with a dance that did nothing but tease. As she disappears into the tent, she wraps up years of experience, enjoyment and disapproval of the sex war into one word: 'Suckers!'

West, Nathanael (1904–1940) (Nathan Weinstein) American novelist and screenwriter. His novel Miss Lonelyhearts was filmed, poorly, as Advice to the Lovelorn 33 and his A Cool Million was sold to Columbia but never produced. He wrote scathingly about Hollywood in The Day of the Locust, published in 1939 and filmed in 1975 by John Schlesinger. His screenplays give little indication of his unsettling talent, being routine 'B' pictures for the most part, for companies like Republic and RKO. He and his wife Eileen (heroine of the book My Sister Eileen, 1938, by her sister Ruth McKenney, which was filmed in 1942) were killed in a car crash.

Biography: 1970, Nathanael West: The Art of His Life by Jay Martin. Also: 1976, Sometime in the Sun by Tom Dardis. 1990, Writers in Hollywood 1915–51 by Ian Hamilton.

They gave me a job to do five minutes after I sat down in my office – a scenario about a beauty parlour – and I'm expected to turn out pages and pages a day. There's no fooling here. – N.W. on his first Hollywood job at Columbia

He left two books more finished and complete as works of art than almost anything else produced by his generation. – Edmund Wilson

He was ahead of his time in knowing that Hollywood was impermanent and literature lasting, and in never confusing the two. – Milton Spurling

Whale, James (1896–1957)
Enigmatic English director who brought a fresh touch to Hollywood films of the macabre. Born in Dudley, Worcestershire, he trained as an artist and began acting in a German prison camp in the First World War, later working as a repertory actor and set designer before becoming an in-demand director following the unexpected success of his production of R. C. Sherriff's Journey's End. He went to Hollywood to film the play and stayed, working for Universal. After Carl Laemmle lost control of the studio in the mid-30s, his career declined under unsympathetic producers and he turned to painting and directing plays. He drowned himself in his swimming pool, after suffering a stroke. His lovers included former actor and producer David Lewis, with whom he lived for many years. He was played by Ian McKellen in the 1998 biopic Gods and Monsters.

✪ For being Hollywood's most mischievous immigrant. Sunset Boulevard.

❝ The pixie wit of this Hollywood Viennese has sporadically brightened the film scene for more than thirty years. Nor does he save all his wit for his scripts; he is the most quotable of film-makers: 'I have ten commandments. The first nine are, thou shalt not bore. The tenth is, thou shalt have right of final cut.'

On critical prejudice: 'What critics call dirty in our movies, they call lusty in foreign films.'

On fashion: 'You watch, the new wave will discover the slow dissolve in ten years or so.'

On messages: 'In certain pictures I do hope they will leave the cinema a little enriched, but I don't make them pay a buck and a half and then ram a lecture down their throats.'

On direction: 'The best director is the one you don't see.'

On technique: 'The close-up is such a valuable thing – like a trump at bridge.'

On finances: 'No one says, "Boy I must see that film – I hear it came in under budget."'

A man with such waspish wit naturally invites retaliation, even from his wife: 'Long before Billy Wilder was Billy Wilder, he thought he was Billy Wilder.'

That may have been in response to a cable he sent her from Paris just after the war. She had requested him to buy and send a bidet. After a vain search he sent the message: 'Unable obtain bidet. Suggest handstand in shower.'

Wilder is the kind of man who can scarcely observe anything without being funny about it. For instance: 'France is a country where the money falls apart in your hands and you can't tear the toilet paper.'

But he could be just as ornery as anybody else. As Harry Kurnitz said: 'Billy Wilder at work is two people: Mr Hyde and Mr Hyde.'

Andrew Sarris summed up accurately: 'Wilder is a curdled Lubitsch, romanticism gone sour, 78rpm played at 45 an old-worldling from Vienna perpetually sneering at Hollywood as it engulfs him.'

Wilder wouldn't be listening – too busy constructing scenarios: 'An actor enters through a door, you've got nothing. But if he enters through a window, you've got a situation.'

Williams, Emlyn (1905–1987)
Welsh leading actor, dramatist, screenwriter and director. Born in Mostyn, he was a poor boy from a mining village who, encouraged by his teacher, won a scholarship to Oxford, a subject that formed the basis of his most successful play, The Corn Is Green. On stage from 1927, and a prolific playwright in the 30s and 40s, he began in films repeating one of his stage successes, later becoming an occasional screenwriter and director. Two projects that never came to fruition were the role of Caligula in Alexander Korda's abandoned I, Claudius and a screenplay, Gala Night, based on Arthur Machen's The Terror. From the early 50s, he gained a new fame for his one-man shows based on the work of Charles Dickens, Dylan Thomas and Saki. He was the father of actor Brook Williams (1938–2005).

His best film roles were as Lord Lebanon in The Frightened Lady, Shorty Matthews in They Drive by Night, Dennis in Hatter's Castle, Maxwell Bard in Three Husbands, and William Collyer in The Deep Blue Sea.

Williams, Tennessee (1911–1983) (Thomas Lanier Williams)
Popular American playwright whose work, usually concerned with strong sexual emotions, has often been translated to the screen, despite the fact that in the process it has been so watered down as to lose much of its power. Born in Columbus, Mississippi, the son of a shoe salesman, he studied at the University of Iowa and found success with his autobiographical The Glass Menagerie 45, the only one of his plays not to have been distorted by the film studios. The Broadway production of A Streetcar Named Desire 47 made a star of Marlon Brando, who repeated his role in the film directed by Elia Kazan. Williams was not often happy with the films of his work: he thought Baby Doll lacked the right wanton hilarity; that Suddenly, Last Summer ('It made me throw up,' he said) suffered from the miscasting of Elizabeth Taylor in the part of a woman used by her homosexual cousin to attract youths. He was no happier with her performance in Boom, based on The Milk Train Doesn't Stop Here Anymore, thinking her too young for her role, and Richard Burton too old for his, though he thought the result 'an artistic success'. His later plays, which were written under the stimulus of alcohol and drugs, have not attracted film-makers. He died choking on a bottle-cap in a New York hotel room.

“ In a time when diffidence is fashionable, it is refreshing to find a British director who seems deliberately to court comparison with Erich Von Stroheim: 'A team effort is a lot of people doing what I say.'

Original? It seems so. It is also true; and unlike Von Stroheim Mr Winner does get his films out on time and below budget, facts which tend to atone for his arrogance. He knows that: 'In this business, disaster is always just around the corner.'

And that: 'Every film is a great success until it is released.'

He remembers the days when: 'You could make a film for £100,000 and get your money back from people sheltering from the rain.'

He won't make the mistake of imagining that those days are still here. He enjoys the big money: 'Success has gone to my stomach.'

And he finds that: 'The hardest part of directing is staying awake for nine weeks at a stretch.'

He has no qualms about what he purveys: 'There's no moralistic side to Death Wish: it's a pleasant romp.'

And he is proud of his prowess: 'Being in the movie business is like being a tennis player. You have to keep your total concentration and your mind on the ball. The minute you fall in love with Tatum O'Neal or get flabby, you've had it.'

Wise, Ernie

See Morecambe, Eric.

Wise, Robert (1914–2005)

Versatile American director, a former editor. Born in Winchester, Indiana, he began as a messenger in the editing department of RKO. After working his way up to editor, he was assigned to help Orson Welles with Citizen Kane and, more controversially, cut Welles' The Magnificent Ambersons down to size, as instructed by the studio, thereby, according to Welles, ruining his work . Wise's first film as a director was a horror movie for producer Val Lewton and he went on to make films in many genres, most successfully with the musicals West Side Story and The Sound of Music.

Wodehouse, Sir P(elham) G(ranville) (1881–1975)

Prolific English comic novelist, lyricist and screenwriter. Born in Guildford, Surrey, he was educated at Dulwich College, published his first novel in 1902, and wrote some 120 books. He also worked as a journalist and moved to America to become drama critic of Vanity Fair. He adapted his work as plays and musicals, often in collaboration with Guy Bolton, and spent a year in Hollywood from 1929, under contract to MGM at $2,000, where he also gained a reputation as Beverly Hills' only pedestrian, always walking the six miles from his home to the studio. He returned to the studio in 1936, at $2,500 a week for six months, and, as previously, found that he was given little work to do. His best-known lyrics, to Jerome Kern's music, were 'Bill' for the three-times-filmed musical Showboat, which also featured in The Man I Love 47 and The Helen Morgan Story/Both Ends of the Candle 57, and the title song for a biopic of Kern, Till the Clouds Roll By 46. His broadcasts to America during the Second World War from Germany, where he had been detained, caused a scandal in Britain, which resulted in him returning to live in America and becoming an American citizen in 1955. He was knighted in 1975, shortly before his death. His work has been somewhat neglected by the cinema, though it has proved more popular on television, with the series Blandings Castle 67, starring Ralph Richardson as the pig-obsessed Lord Emsworth; Ukridge 68, starring Anton Rodgers; and Wodehouse Playhouse 75–78, based on his short stories, with John Alderton and Pauline Collins. Two American films were made about the perfect manservant Jeeves, starring Arthur Treacher, though neither bore much resemblance to the original. In the 30s, MGM considered buying the rights to the character, but Irving Thalberg decided against it when he asked his chauffeur if he had ever hear of anyone called Jeeves, and the driver replied that he thought it was the name of his wife's butcher. Faithful to the spirit of the stories were two British TV series about the ineffectual, upper-class Bertie Wooster and his impeccable valet: The World of Wooster 65–67, starring Ian Carmichael and Dennis Price, and Jeeves and Wooster 90–93, with Stephen Fry and Hugh Laurie.

Zanuck, Darryl F. (1902–1979)
American production executive. Started career in the 20s, writing stories for Rin Tin Tin. Production chief for Warners 1931. Co-founder Twentieth-Century Productions 1933; merged with Fox 1935. Vice-president in charge of production for Twentieth Century-Fox 1935–52, then independent; returned in 1962 as executive president. He was romantically involved with actresses Dolores Costello, Linda Darnell, Carol Landis and Gene Tierney. He also attempted unsuccessfully to make stars of his lover Bella Darvi and of French singer Juliette Greco.

Biography: 1998, Twentieth Century's Fox by George F. Custen.

Other books: 1993, Memo from Darryl Zanuck: The Golden Years at Twentieth Century Fox, edited by Rudy Behlmer.

Under the name Mark Canfield wrote the screenplay of Crack in the Mirror 60.

◉ For being Hollywood's most efficient mogul, and for making very good films. The Grapes of Wrath.

“ The hardiest and longest-lived of the moguls of Hollywood's golden age was somehow the most disappointing in terms of colour and personality. His most personal trait was his allegedly avid sexual appetite, though he himself said: 'Any of my indiscretions were with people, not actresses.'

He was a tough employer: 'There was only one boss I believed in, and that was me.'

As his biographer Mel Gussow said: 'He couldn't stand stubbornness in anybody but himself.'

He spent 35 years, more or less, as boss of Twentieth Century-Fox, and before that for 10 years was production head of Warners. His ideas for remakes were legendary: 'I want to do Air Force in a submarine.'

Another of his credos is now outdated: 'When you get a sex story in biblical garb, you can open your own mint.'

He produced many worthy films, perhaps for rather stodgy reasons: 'We are in the business primarily to provide entertainment, but in doing so we do not dodge the issue if we can also provide enlightenment.'

Or, more pithily: 'I know audiences feed on crap, but I cannot believe we are so lacking that we cannot dish it up to them with some trace of originality.'

On another occasion, however, he was optimistic: 'Public taste is an ascending spiral.'

But his final production philosophy was: 'Take a chance and spend a million dollars and hope you're right.'

Time summed him up in 1950: 'He is richly endowed with tough-mindness, talent, an outsized ego, and a glutton's craving for hard work.'

And his son has the last word: 'He had guts. He was willing to take the responsibility and the blame. He would say yes or no. They would ask is it any good, and if he thought it was, that was enough to put it into production.',

Don't say yes until I finish talking! – D.F.Z. (also the title of his biography by Mel Gussow)

I decided to become a genius. – D.F.Z.

As I see it today, the boss of the Studio is actually no longer a boss – he has a title but that is all. He is the slave of agents and actors with their own corporations and insane competition from independent operators and promoters. – D.F.Z., 1961

Success in movies boils down to three things: story, story, story. – D.F.Z.

From Poland to Polo in one generation. – Arthur Mayer on D.F.Z.

A narrow bastard with only two interests in life, making movies and satisfying his cock. – Henry Fonda on D.F.Z.

Zimmerman, Enrique
Venezuelan director who directed, with Lucas Manzano, that country's first feature film, La Dama de las Cayenas 13, based on Alexander Dumas's Camille.

Zinnemann, Fred (1907–1997)
Austrian-born director with varied experience before going to Hollywood in 1929. Born in Vienna, he first planned to be a musician, then studied law at the University of Vienna, and worked as an assistant cameraman in France and Germany. In the USA, he began as an extra in All Quiet on the Western Front, became a script clerk, and directed shorts, including That Mothers Might Live (AA) 38, and episodes of Crime Does Not Pay in the late 30s and early 40s. After a tentative start as a director, he scored a box-office success with High Noon in the early 50s, and a succession of well-crafted, popular movies followed. He was conscious of his own worth: when one gauche young movie executive summoned him to his office and said to him, 'Tell me about a few things you've done,' Zinnemann paused and said, 'You first.'

Zukor, Adolph (1873–1976)
Hungarian-born film pioneer. Emigrated to America, became film salesman, nickelodeon owner, and independent producer (in 1913), by persuading New York stage stars James O'Neill, James K. Hackett and Minnie Maddern Fiske to appear in productions of, respectively, The Count of Monte Cristo, The Prisoner of Zenda and Tess of the D'Urbervilles. This was the start of 'Famous Players', which in 1916 merged with Jesse Lasky's production interests and later became Paramount Pictures. He remained board chairman of the latter from 1935. He received a Special Academy Award 1948 'for his services to the industry over a period of 40 years'.

MOVIE REMAKES, SERIES, THEMES AND GENRES

Abie's Irish Rose.

Anne Nichols' long-running Broadway comedy of 1927, about a Catholic girl marrying into a Jewish family, has twice been filmed: by Victor Fleming in 1928 and by Edward hSutherland in 1946. The theme has frequently been borrowed, as in the 1973 TV series Bridget Loves Bernie.

abortion,

unmentionable on the screen for many years save in Continental dramas like Carnet de Bal 37, and officially ostracized exploitation pictures like Amok 34, was first permitted as a Hollywood plot point in Detective Story 51. Six years later, Blue Denim concerned an abortion that was prevented; and the later abortion scenes in The Best of Everything 59, Sweet Bird of Youth 62, The Interns 62, and Love with the Proper Stranger 64 scarcely displayed an obsession with the subject. Meanwhile however the British gave it full rein in Saturday Night and Sunday Morning 60, The L-Shaped Room 62, Alfie 66, and Up the Junction 68; by which time it had certainly lost its shock value. By 1969 Hollywood felt confident enough to use it as the plot point of a commercial thriller, Daddy's Gone A-Hunting, and in 1972 it became the specific subject of To Find A Man. The Canadian documentary Democracy on Trial: The Morgentaler Affair, 84, covered a doctor's fight for the right of women to have legal abortions, though otherwise the subject only featured on TV movies. In the 90s, it became more meainstream: Alexander Payne's satire Citizen Ruth, 96, starred Laura Dern as a drug-addict fought over by pro- and anti-abortionists. Cider House Rules, 99, featured Michael Caine as an orphanage doctor carrying out abortions on the side. Mike Leigh's Vera Drake 04, about a good-hearted working-class backstreet abortionist, pointed out the sexual hypocrisies of Britain in the 1950s.

Accent on Youth.

Samson Raphaelson's successful Broadway play about a lazy playwright spurred to success by his young secretary has been filmed three times. In 1935 Herbert Marshall and Sylvia Sidney were directed by Wesley Ruggles. In 1950 it turned up as Mr Music, with Bing Crosby and Nancy Olson, directed by Richard Haydn; and in 1959 it emerged again as But Not for Me, with Clark Gable and Carroll Baker, directed by Walter Lang.

have seldom been the subject of biopics. Anna Neagle appeared as Peg Woffington, with Cedric Hardwicke as David Garrick, in Peg of Old Drury 35, and Garrick was played by Brian Aherne in The Great Garrick 37. Miriam Hopkins was Mrs Leslie Carter in Lady with Red Hair 41. Charlie Ruggles (of all people) played Otis Skinner in Our Hearts Were Young and Gay 44, Richard Burton was Edwin Booth in Prince of Players 54, and Kim Novak was Jeanne Eagels 56. The 60s brought Julie Andrews and Daniel Massey as Gertie Lawrence and Noël Coward in Star! In the 70s one great actress played another, with Glenda Jackson as The Incredible Sarah (Bernhardt) 76, though the production did justice to neither of them, and James Earl Jones repeated on film his stage performance as Paul Robeson 77. Of the idols of its own creation, Hollywood has so far given us biographics of Valentino, Jean Harlow, Lon Chaney, Charlie Chaplin, Joan Crawford (though concentrating on her as a child abuser), Diana and John Barrymore, Lillian Roth, Buster Keaton, Pearl White, W.C. Fields and Gable and Lombard. TV movies have been made of the lives of Abbott and Costello, Humphrey Bogart, James Dean, Dorothy Dandridge, Rita Hayworth, Audrey Hepburn, Grace Kelly, Ernie Kovacs, Sophia Loren (in which she played both herself and her mother), Marilyn Monroe, Jayne Mansfield, Jean Seberg and Mae West.

A high proportion of feature films have been adapted from other media. A poem was the basis of The Set-Up, but mostly the studios have raided novels and plays for their material. The cost of such rights used to be minimal, but can now run into millions of dollars, the rights to Annie having allegedly cost a quarter of the film's $35m budget. A bonus however has appeared in the form of television mini-series, which thirty or forty years after the film version, when the original material would be unfashionable with film audiences, have started the money flowing again for such items as My Cousin Rachel, The Citadel and How Green Was My Valley.

At one time Hollywood had the reputation of using only the title of the items it bought. Certainly the Bulldog Drummond and Sherlock Holmes series bore little relation to the stories on which they were allegedly based: it seemed to be a point of honour with screenwriters to do better (if they could). The Grapes of Wrath was given an upbeat ending. Pride and Prejudice had its period advanced fifty years to a time when the fashions were more alluring. Wuthering Heights lost its second half. Rebecca reduced its hero from a murderer to an accessory after the fact. Foreign Correspondent took not a single incident from its alleged basis, Personal History by Vincent Sheean. Forever Amber's heroine became far more sinned against than sinning. These Three was adapted by Lillian Hellman from her own play The Children's Hour, but she had to change the central relationship from lesbian to heterosexual. The Killers wore out Hemingway's short story in the first ten minutes, and filled out the next ninety with new material. Forbidden Planet placed the plot of Shakespeare's The Tempest in outer space. Graham Greene's The Quiet American saw its point exactly reversed in a 1957 version, though a remake in 2002 kept close to the original novel. Bernard Shaw was persuaded to add a happy ending (now the accepted one) to his anti-romantic Pygmalion. And Noël Coward's Design for Living saw the light of day in Hollywood with only one line intact, allegedly 'Kippers on toast'. Adaptation had little to do with the book on which it was based, Susan Orlean's The Orchid Thief about an eccentric plant collector, but was instead concerned with screenwriter Charlie Kaufman's difficulties in adapting it for the screen.

It has to be admitted that some excellent films have resulted from this tampering, and 'rearrangement' may seem in many cases preferable to the too-literal transcriptions in recent years of such properties as Sleuth, The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas, the Neil Simon comedies, and Death Trap, in which last case a new twist ending was added, but so lamely that the audience failed to grasp it.

Among the most skilled adapters from the 'golden age' are Dudley Nichols, Ben Hecht, Jules Furthman, Lamar Trotti, Philip Dunne, Casey Robinson, Samson Raphaelson, R. C. Sherriff, John Balderston and Donald Ogden Stewart.

A clever scheme for disposing of an enemy was worked out in Address Unknown.

The Admirable Crichton.

J.M. Barrie's comedy, about master and man reversing roles after being shipwrecked on a desert island, has long fascinated film-makers. (Goldwyn is said to have lost interest after discovering that it was not what it sounded, a naval drama.) De Mille filmed it in 1919 as Male and Female, with Thomas Meighan and Gloria Swanson; a musical version, We're Not Dressing, turned up in 1934 with Bing Crosby and Carole Lombard; in 1957 Kenneth More and Diane Cilento appeared in a more or less straight version of the play, under its original title, directed by Lewis Gilbert. More also appeared on the stage in a musical adaptation, Our Man Crichton.

advertising

appears seldom as a background to movies, but when it does, satire is usually in the air, as in Christmas in July, The Hucksters, Mr Blandings Builds His Dream House, It Should Happen To You, Lover Come Back, Good Neighbor Sam, How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying, Putney Swope, How to Get Ahead in Advertising, Every Home Should Have One, Bliss/Think Dirty and Crazy People. The Agency dealt dully with subliminal advertising. The subject was played fairly straight in Madison Avenue and The Narrowing Circle. The industry still provides a shorthand for glamour, as in Nancy Meyer's romantic comedy of office life What Women Want 00.

Ah, Wilderness!

Eugene O'Neill's gentle comedy of growing up in a small American town was produced on Broadway in 1933. In 1935 it was filmed by Clarence Brown, with Eric Linden, Lionel Barrymore, Wallace Beery and Mickey Rooney. In 1947 Rouben Mamoulian remade it as a semi-musical, Summer Holiday: in the same roles were Mickey Rooney, Walter Huston, Frank Morgan and Jackie Jenkins.

AIDS,

a deficiency of the immune system caused by infection with HIV (human immunodeficiency virus), became headline news in July 1985 when Rock Hudson, seriously ill in a Paris clinic, issued a statement to the press to the effect that he had 'acquired immune deficiency syndrome'. He died later that year. Since that time many more performers and others involved in showbusiness have died from AIDS – the American magazine Premiere reported in its February 92 issue that AIDS deaths in Hollywood were 'climbing into the thousands' – and Hollywood personalities have been involved in fund-raising to combat the disease. That concern has so far not resulted in many films on the subject, though Larry Kramer, producer and screenwriter of Women in Love and other films, has written a play, The Normal Heart, and a book about it, and Oscar Moore, the late editor of the trade paper Screen International, published a novel, A Matter of Life and Sex, in which the central character dies of AIDS. The first was a low-budget film, Parting Glances 86, directed by Bill Sherwood, who died of AIDS four years later aged 37; it was followed by a mainstream movie, Longtime Companion 90; an Oscar-winning documentary, Common Threads: Stories from the Quilt 89; a Spanish comedy, Love in the Time of Hysteria/ Solo con Tu Pareja 92, directed by Alfonso Cuaron, and Israeli director Amos Guttman's Amazing Grace 92. Since then, it was been dealt with in Savage Nights/Les Nuits Fauves 92, written and directed by its star Cyril Collard, who died of AIDS shortly after completing it; Derek Jarman's Blue 93, made shortly before he died of AIDS; Philadelphia 93, which won an Oscar for its star, Tom Hanks, but annoyed many activists with its timid treatment of homosexuality; and in the TV film And the Band Played On 94. Independent film-makers have treated the subject with greater irreverence, notably in Gregg Araki's The Living End 92, and John Greyson's Zero Patience 94, the first AIDS musical. It remains a subject avoided by mainstream Hollywood, though providing subject-matter for TV films, of the 'disease of the week' variety, and independent films, such as Green Plaid Shirt (wd Richard Natale) 96, Alive and Kicking (w Martin Sherman, d Nancy Meckler) 96, Love! Valour! Compassion! (w Terrence McNally, d Joe Mantello) 96, Chocolate Babies (wd Stephen Winter) 96, and It's My Party (d Randal Kleiser) 96. The Velocity of Gary 98, directed by Dan Ireland, starred Vincent D'Onofrio as a bisexual porn star who succumbs to the disease, and Long Live Life/Zindagi Zindabad 98, directed by Sumitra Bhave and Sunil Sukthankar, dealt with the impact of AIDS on Indian society.

air balloons,

of the spherical type with a hanging basket, have provided picturesque climaxes in films as diverse as Trottie True, The Wizard of Oz and Charlie Bubbles, while the initial part of the journey in Around the World in Eighty Days was accomplished in a splendidly ornate example of the species, and a dramatically styled version was used in Five Weeks in a Balloon. Balloons were popular for comic gags in silent films, notably Buster Keaton's Balloonatic. The most charming adaptation of the idea was in The Red Balloon, at the end of which a group of toy balloons carried the boy hero off into the sky; and the director of that film next made Stowaway in the Sky, which was about an air balloon over France. Balloons also featured in Those Magnificent Men in Their Flying Machines, Mysterious Island, The Great Bank Robbery, Chitty Chitty Bang Bang, The Great Race, Black Sunday.

Barrage balloons, a familiar sight in the Britain of World War II, seldom featured in films apart from the Crazy Gang's Gasbags and Map of the Human Heart 93, where a couple make love on top of one; but zeppelins or dirigibles were featured in Dirigible itself, Hell's Angels, Madame Satan, The Assassination Bureau, The Red Tent, Zeppelin, and of course in The Hindenburg.

airplanes,

one of the most exciting inventions of the twentieth century, have naturally been a popular source of cinematic thrills. Films about aviation itself began with the newsreel shots of attempts by early birdmen, some of them with tragic results: these have been well preserved in a Robert Youngson one-reeler of the early 50s, This Mechanical Age. In the 20s began the long series of spectacular aerial dramas: Wings, Hell's Angels, Dawn Patrol, Lucky Devils, Devil Dogs of the Air, F.P.I, Wings of the Navy, Men with Wings, Test Pilot, Only Angels Have Wings. British films on aviation were rare, exceptions being the exciting Q Planes and Korda's ill-fated documentary Conquest of the Air; but 1939 brought a need to show the nation's strength, and this was done superbly in such films as The Lion Has Wings, Squadron Leader X, Target for Tonight, The First of the Few, Coastal Command, Flying Fortress, Journey Together and The Way to the Stars. When America entered the war we were deluged with aerial melodramas, mostly with high-sounding titles and high propagandist content: Eagle Squadron, International Squadron, I Wanted Wings, Winged Victory, A Wing and a Prayer, The Wild Blue Yonder, Bombardier, God Is My Co-Pilot, Flying Tigers, Captains of the Clouds, Dive Bomber, Air Force, Flight Command, Thirty Seconds over Tokyo, and many others. Even Disney weighed in with the instructional Victory Through Air Power.

During the 40s began the still-continuing stream of biographies of aviation pioneers and air aces: They Flew Alone (Amy Johnson), Gallant Journey (John Montgomery), Flight for Freedom (Amelia Earhart), Captain Eddie (Eddie Rickenbacker), The McConnell Story, Reach for the Sky (Douglas Bader), The Dam Busters (Dr Barnes Wallis and Guy Gibson), The Spirit of St Louis (Lindbergh), The One That Got Away (Franz von Werra), Wings of the Eagle (Spig Wead), Von Richthofen and Brown, etc. Fictional additions to this cycle include Ace Eli and Rodger of the Skies and The Great Waldo Pepper.

Post-war air dramas from Hollywood showed a considerable increase in thoughtfulness. The responsibility of power was examined in Command Decision, Twelve O'Clock High, The Beginning or the End, Strategic Air Command and others, while the future of aviation was the subject of such films as On the Threshold of Space, Towards the Unknown and X-15. But there has also been room for spectaculars like Lafayette Escadrille, Bombers B-52, The Longest Day and The Blue Max, for such romantic dramas as Blaze of Noon, Chain Lightning, Tarnished Angels and The Bridges at Toko-Ri, and even for the more routine melodramatics of Sky Commando, Battle Taxi, 633 Squadron, Sky Tiger, Jet Pilot, Flight from Ashiya and The Flight of the Phoenix. Britain too has turned out routine recruiting thrillers like The Red Beret and High Flight, with a nod to civil aviation in Out of the Clouds; against these can be set the earnest probing of The Sound Barrier and The Man in the Sky, the affectionate nostalgia of Angels One Five and Conflict of Wings. Airport and its all-star sequels are in a category of their own, that of aerial multi-drama, inspired by The High and the Mighty, Jet Over the Atlantic and Jetstorm and continuing into the 70s with Skyjacked.

In films where aviation itself is not the main subject, planes can be used for a wide variety of dramatic purposes. In Triumph of the Will Hitler's arrival at Nuremberg was made to seem godlike by clever photography of his plane descending through the clouds. A very different effect was given in The Best Years of Our Lives which began with three war veterans being given a lift home in the nose of a bomber; and the same film, in the scene when Dana Andrews walks through a scrapyard full of the planes he has so recently been flying in the war, produced a ruefully moving sense of waste and futility. Godlike again was Raymond Massey's fleet of futuristic planes in Things to Come; and impeccable trick photography gave memorable punch to a musical, Flying Down to Rio, in which chorus girls apparently performed on the wings of planes in mid-air. The Aviator 04, a biopic on pioneering pilot, tycoon and film mogul Howard Hughes featured his obsession with flying, including the horrendous crash that almost killed him.

Any list of the most spectacular plane sequences should include Cary Grant being chased through the cornfield in North by Northwest; Claudette Colbert and Ray Milland escaping from Spain in Arise My Love; King Kong being cornered on the Empire State Building; the plane crashing into the sea in Foreign Correspondent; the climax of Murphy's War, and, of course, the climactic sequences of films already mentioned, such as Hell's Angels, The Blue Max, The Sound Barrier and Dawn Patrol. Comedy flying sequences can be equally thrilling, as shown by George Formby in It's in the Air, Abbott and Costello in Keep 'Em Flying, the Marx Brothers in A Night in Casablanca, Laurel and Hardy in The Flying Deuces, Duggie Wakefield in Spy for a Day, Buddy Hackett and Mickey Rooney in It's a Mad Mad Mad Mad World, Jimmy Edwards in Nearly a Nasty Accident, Pat Boone in Never Put It In Writing, W. C. Fields in Never Give a Sucker an Even Break, Spencer Tracy in State of the Union, Jack Lemmon in The Great Race, Fred MacMurray (flying a Model T) in The Absent-minded Professor, James Stewart in You Gotta Stay Happy, and practically the whole cast of Those Magnificent Men in Their Flying Machines. Air hostesses were featured in Come Fly With Me and Boeing-Boeing.

Plane crashes have been the dramatic starting point of many films including Lost Horizon, Five Came Back, Back from Eternity, Fate Is the Hunter, The Night My Number Came Up, Broken Journey, SOS Pacific, The Flight of the Phoenix, Sands of the Kalahari, Survive!, Hey I'm Alive (TV) and Family Flight (TV). The fear that a plane will crash has also been a potent source of screen melodrama, especially in such films as No Highway, The High and the Mighty, Julie, Zero Hour, Jet Storm, Jet over the Atlantic, The Night My Number Came Up, the Airport series, and Skyjacked, which focus on the emotional reactions of passengers. The proximity of planes to heaven has been useful in fantasies like Here Comes Mr Jordan, A Guy Named Joe, A Matter of Life and Death and The Flight That Disappeared. Finally, plane-building was used as a symbol of power in The Carpetbaggers; and symbols of a more fearsome kind are the atomic bombers which figured so largely in Dr Strangelove and Fail Safe.

In 1980 the airplane crash or near-crash genre, which had been done to death in such TV movies as SST: Disaster in the Sky and Murder on Flight 502, was effectively parodied in Airplane!, which took its thread of plot from Zero Hour and hung on to it every airplane joke that anybody could think of. 1983's Airplane II: The Sequel was far less funny, and just to show that parody doesn't harm the chances of the jut-jawed stuff, along on TV soon after came Starflight: The Plane That Couldn't Land. Firefox dealt with Soviet state-of-the-art fighter planes, with Clint Eastwood having to 'think Russian' in order to fly the one he steals; Stealth featured a plane piloted by a rogue computer set on starting another world war; Top Gun gave us Tom Cruise as an élite naval aviator and was followed by the lower-budget Iron Eagle series of derring-do in the skies, a genre that was mercilessly mocked by Hot Shots! No such fate, unfortunately, awaited Air Force One 97, with Harrison Ford as an all-action US President whose plane is hijacked. A hijacking also featured in Turbulence 96, and Con Air 97, in which violent criminals take over a plane. The thriller Red Eye 05 put a passenger at risk from a homicidal fellow traveller while Flight Plan 05 recycled the plot of The Lady Vanishes, when the crew refuse to admit that a woman's daughter has vanished in mid-flight. Ground Control 98 and Pushing Tin 99 grounded audiences among dysfunctional air traffic controllers.

were historically short-lived, and being expensive to reconstruct appeared in few films and never very good ones. Some of the atmosphere can however be gained from Madam Satan, Hell's Angels, The Assassination Bureau, Zeppelin and The Hindenburg.

The Alamo,

originally a cottonwood tree, gave its name to a Franciscan mission in San Antonio, where in 1836 180 Americans were overpowered and slaughtered by 4,000 Mexicans. As those who died included such legendary figures as Jim Bowie and Davy Crockett, the siege of the Alamo has figured in many a film, notably Man of Conquest 39, The Last Command 55, The Alamo 60, Alamo: The Price of Freedom 88 and The Alamo 04. In The Man from the Alamo 53, Glenn Ford played a survivor who left before the final battle and is wrongly branded a coward., while in San Antonio 45, Errol Flynn and Paul Kelly had a non-historic fight in the mission ruins.

have been familiar screen figures since movies began: Jack Norton and Arthur Housman made a living playing little else, and other comic inebriates include James Stewart in Harvey, William Powell in The Thin Man and its successors, Wallace Beery in Ah Wilderness (followed by Frank Morgan in Summer Holiday), Dean Martin in Rio Bravo (followed by Robert Mitchum in El Dorado), Jackie Gleason in Papa's Delicate Condition, and Dudley Moore in Arthur.

More serious studies of alcoholism include Fredric March (followed by James Mason) in A Star is Born, Bing Crosby in The Country Girl, James Cagney and Gig Young in Come Fill The Cup, Spencer Tracy in The People Against O'Hara, Michael Redgrave in Time Without Pity, Claude Rains in The White Tower, Ingrid Bergman in Under Capricorn, Chester Morris in Blind Spot, Ray Milland in The Lost Weekend and Night into Morning, Jack Lemmon and Lee Remick in Days of Wine and Roses, Julie London in The Great Man, Van Johnson in The Bottom of the Bottle, Henry Fonda in The Fugitive, Lars Hanson in The Atonement of Gosta Berling, Susan Hayward in Smash Up and I'll Cry Tomorrow, Burt Lancaster in Come Back Little Sheba, Thomas Mitchell (followed by Bing Crosby) in Stagecoach, David Farrar in The Small Back Room, Bette Davis in Dangerous, Jason Robards in Long Day's Journey Into Night, Gregory Peck in Beloved Infidel, Donald O'Connor in The Buster Keaton Story, George Murphy in Show Business, Charles Laughton (followed by Robert Newton) in Vessel of Wrath (US, The Beachcomber), James Dunn in A Tree Grows in Brooklyn, Joan Fontaine in Something to Live For, Myrna Loy in From the Terrace, Maurice Ronet in Le Feu Follet, Kenneth More in Dark of the Sun, Frank Sinatra in The Joker is Wild, Claire Bloom in Red Sky At Morning, Dick Van Dyke in The Morning After (TV), Albert Finney in Under the Volcano, Meg Ryan in When a Man Loves a Woman, Mark Rylance in The Grass Arena, James Woods in Curse of the Starving Classes, and Nicolas Cage in Leaving Las Vegas.

Aldwych farces

were plays presented at the Aldwych Theatre in London, starting in 1925 with Cuckoo in the Nest, up to 1933's A Bit of a Test. Most were written by Ben Travers, and starred Tom Walls, Ralph Lynn, Robertson Hare and Mary Brough. With the exception of A Bit of a Test, they were transferred virtually intact to the screen, retaining members of the original cast and usually directed by Walls. As cinema they are often stilted, but they form a valuable record of popular entertainment of the era and display some admirably skilled comic acting. According to producer Herbert Wilcox, Rookery Nook cost £14,000 to make and grossed £150,000 in Britain alone. Travers also wrote original screenplays for Walls and company in a similar style.

Rookery Nook 30. Plunder 31. Mischief 31. Thark 32. A Night Like This 32. A Cuckoo in the Nest 33. Turkey Time 33. A Cup of Kindness 34. Dirty Work 34.

Algonquin Round Table.

A meeting-place in the dining-room of the Algonquin Hotel of New York journalists, columnists, writers and actors during the 20s. They included Franklin P. Adams, Heywood Broun, Robert Benchley, George S. Kaufman, Marc Connelly, Alexander Woollcott, Robert E. Sherwood, Ring Lardner, Dorothy Parker, Ben Hecht, Deems Taylor, Charles MacArthur, Harpo Marx and Tallulah Bankhead. Noted for its wit, reported in newspaper and magazine columns by many of the participants, it was commemorated in Alan Rudolph's film Mrs Parker and the Vicious Circle 94, as well as in two books – The Vicious Circle by Margaret Case Harriman (1951) and The Algonquin Wits (1968), edited by Robert E. Drennen – and a novel, Grace Atherton's Black Oxen, published in 1932.

66 Among its witticisms:

What is so rare as a Woollcott first edition?

asked Alexander Woollcott as he autographed one of his books.

A Woollcott second edition, said Franklin P. Adams. Woollcott also complained:

Everything I like is either illegal, immoral, or fattening.

Robert Benchley remarked:

Let's get out of these wet clothes and into a dry martini.

Dorothy Parker said:

That woman speaks eighteen languages and can't say 'No' in any of them and, when a guest boasted of the longevity of her marriage by saying 'I've kept him for seven years', replied:

Keep him long enough and he'll come back in style.

After listening to the recitation of a work by a dead poet, Ring Lardner asked:

Did he write that before or after he died?

The Round Table was made up of a motley and nondescript group of people who wanted to eat lunch, and that's about it. – George S. Kaufman

The Round Table was also a kind of obstetrics ward and testing and development laboratory for some of the best humor and best humorists the United States has ever produced. – Scott Meredith

Ali Baba.

The Arabian Nights story, of a poor camel-driver who outwits 40 thieves by trailing them to their magic cave which opens to a password, has been a favourite with film-makers. Edison made a version in 1902, William Fox in 1919. In 1944 Jon Hall starred in Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves, while in 1952 Tony Curtis was Son of Ali Baba. (The 1944 film was remade, with much use of footage from the original, in 1964 as Sword of Ali Baba, starring Peter Mann.) Meanwhile in 1954 Fernandel appeared in a French comedy version under Jacques Becker's direction. Eddie Cantor dreamed he was Ali Baba in Ali Baba Goes to Town 37, and the character has appeared in many other Arabian Nights films. A superior spelling was adopted for The Adventures of Hajji Baba 56, in which John Derek played the role.

Alice in Wonderland.

This Victorian nonsense classic was written by Lewis Carroll (C.L. Dodgson) and published in 1865. Most film versions – and there have been several silent ones – have included material from Through the Looking Glass, published in 1871. Since sound there have been two American productions using actors (in 1931 with little-known players and in 1933 with Charlotte Henry and an all-star Paramount cast); a 1950 French version with Carol Marsh and Bunin's puppets; a rather stiff and unimaginative Disney cartoon in 1951; a stolid British live-action version in 1972; a disturbingly surrealist production, using live-action and stop-motion animation, by Jan Svankmajer in 1988; and a stilted TV movie, in which its animatronic puppets out-performed the live actors, in 1999. In 1985 EMI brought out Dennis Potter's Dreamchild, in which the aged Alice Liddell, played by Coral Browne, goes to New York and is questioned about her relationship with Lewis Carroll.

Alien/Aliens.

Ridley Scott's science-fiction thriller, made in 1979 and scripted by Dan O'Bannon, about an alien intruder aboard a spaceship, was memorable for its brooding atmosphere, its creation of one of the screen's few tough heroines, played by Sigourney Weaver, its publicity tag ('In space, no one can hear you scream') and the complex life-cycle of its alien, created by Swiss artist Hans Giger. A similar plot had already done service in It! The Terror from Beyond Space 58, written by Jerome Bixby. Three sequels followed: the all-action Aliens 86, directed by James Cameron, the downbeat Alien3 92, directed by David Fincher, and Alien: Resurrection 97, directed by Jean-Pierre Jeunet.

The phrase usually connotes giant musicals of the kind which started in the early days of talkies, when each studio put on an extravaganza displaying the talents of all its contract artistes, often to little effect.

Titles included Movietone Follies, Paramount on Parade, The Hollywood Revue of 1929 (MGM), Show of Shows (Warner), King of Jazz (Universal) and Elstree Calling. The practice was revived during World War II: Star Spangled Rhythm (Paramount), Thank Your Lucky Stars (Warner), Follow the Boys (Universal), Hollywood Canteen

(Warner) and Stage Door Canteen helped to cheer up the armed forces. Paramount continued into the later 40s with Variety Girl and Duffy's Tavern, and Warner came up with It's a Great Feeling and Starlift. Carnegie Hall applied the technique to classical music.

Meanwhile dramatic films had found the value of an occasional all-star cast. Grand Hotel,If I Had a Million,Dinner at Eight in the early 30s were followed ten years later by Tales of Manhattan, Forever and a Day and Flesh and Fantasy, while the adoption of particular authors later in the 40s produced all-star episodic films such as Somerset Maugham's Quartet and O. Henry's Full House. From the 50s, an occasional giant-screen epic would pack itself with stars: Around the World in Eighty Days, How the West Was Won, The Greatest Story Ever Told, The Longest Day and A Bridge Too Far were perhaps the most significant of these. The heist comedy Ocean's Eleven 60 starring Frank Sinatra and his Rat Pack friends Dean Martin, Sammy Davis Jnr and Peter Lawford was remade by Steven Soderbergh in 2001 with a cast that included George Clooney, Brad Pitt, Matt Damon, Andy Garcia, Don Cheadle and Julia Roberts, who returned for the sequel Ocean's Twelve 04. Robert Altman's film about Hollywood, The Player, featured 69 stars, mainly playing themselves, while his English countryhouse murder mystery Gosford Park had a cast composed of many of the UK's leading actors.

The American Civil War,

despite the peaks of The Birth of a Nation and Gone with the Wind, was long thought to be an uncommercial subject for film-makers, and certainly this was confirmed by the cool reception of The General, So Red the Rose, and The Red Badge of Courage, among others: the cry 'Fort Sumter has been fired upon' became a guaranteed laugh with any audience. Many westerns considered the after-effects of the war, but the conflict itself was dealt with only occasionally, perhaps because of budget problems. Drums in the Deep South, Alvarez Kelly, Prince of Players, Prisoner of Shark Island, Escape from Fort Bravo, The Outlaw Josey Wales and The Good the Bad and the Ugly were among those to touch on the subject, while Shenandoah dealt thoroughly with the resulting problems for one family. In the 80s, television took up the subject with vigour but no style, in such mini-series as Beulah Land, The Blue and the Gray, and North and South, the story having been previously told in such longer serials as The Americans and Centennial. In 89, the Oscar-winning Glory dealt with the first black soldiers recruited to fight under a young white officer. Gettysburg, 94, concentrated on the war's decisive battle, in a film originally made for television which ran for 4½ hours. Ride With the Devil 99, was concerned with the effects of the war on a small group of friends and their families and the neutrals caught between the two warring factions.

The American Revolution.

Because the subject means no sale in several international markets, this has not been a popular subject with film-makers. D. W. Griffith's America 24 was the most thoroughgoing reconstruction. A year later, Janice Meredith covered some of the same ground. Alexander Hamilton 31 starred George Arliss and had Alan Mowbray as George Washington. Walt Disney's Johnny Tremain showed revolutionary figures through the eyes of an apprentice silversmith. John Paul Jones, the sailor patriot, was played in 1959 by Robert Stack in the film of the same name. In 1959 Bernard Shaw's The Devil's Disciple was filmed with Burt Lancaster, Kirk Douglas and Laurence Olivier. Lafayette 62 showed the war from the viewpoint of the French soldiers sent to assist. 1776 72 is a musical version from the Broadway stage, with Howard da Silva as Ben Franklin. In the mid-70s public broadcasting viewed the revolutionary years through a serial drama, The Adams Chronicles. 1984 brought an 8-hour mini-series with Barry Bostwick as George Washington. In 2000, Mel Gibson starred as a Southern plantation owner who reluctantly joins the revolution in the rabid The Patriot, which invented anachronistic atrocities committed by the British troops.

has been a favourite theme of the movies, and the line 'Who am I?' long since became immortal. Heroes and heroines who have suffered memorably from the affliction include Ronald Colman in Random Harvest, John Hodiak in Somewhere in the Night, Greta Garbo in As You Desire Me, George Peppard in The Third Day, Cornell Borchers in Istanbul, Gregory Peck in Spellbound and Mirage, Phyllis Calvert in The Woman With No Name, Genevieve Page in The Private Life of Sherlock Holmes, Jennifer Jones in Love Letters, Laird Cregar in Hangover Square, William Powell in I Love You Again and Crossroads, Joan Fontaine in The Witches, James Garner in Mister Buddwing, Martin Donovan in Amateur and Jim Carrey in Majestic. In While I Live Carol Raye was the archetypal film amnesiac, emerging out of the mist complete with theme tune. In Portrait of Jennie Jennifer Jones played a ghost who forgot she was dead, and the same might be said of the passengers in Outward Bound (remade as Between Two Worlds) and Thunder Rock. The prize for audacity was won by the scriptwriters of The Mummy's Curse, with its dainty modern maiden who managed to forget that she was really a 3000-year-old mummy! Perhaps the cutest twist of all was suffered by Dan Duryea in Black Angel and Boris Karloff in Grip of the Strangler: having spent the film's running time tracking down a murderer, each discovered himself to be the culprit. The theme was taken probably as far as it can go in Clean Slate 94, in which Dana Carvey wakes up each morning unable to remember anything from the day before. The same premise was brilliantly used in the complex thriller Memento 00, starring Guy Pearce as a man whose short-term memory lasts only a few minutes, which is a handicap when he attempts to discover who murdered his wife. The Bourne Identity 02 had Matt Damon as an agent who is fished out of the ocean, not knowing who he is. Aki Kaurismäki's Man Without A Past 02 dealt with a man rebuilding his life from scratch.

Amos 'n' Andy.

The original blackface double act, immensely popular for many years on American radio, consisted of Freeman F. Gosden (1899-1982) and Charles Correll (1890-1972). They made one film in 1930, Check and Double Check.

anachronisms

are fun to spot, but the ones involving language are easy to defend: ancient Romans may not have used modern slang phrases such as 'nuts to you', but nor did they speak in English anyway. Rarely indeed do the studios let through such gaffes as the extra who wore a wristwatch in The Viking Queen, or the TV aerials in 'Victorian' London in The Wrong Box. or the gas cylinder visible in an overturned chariot in The Gladiator. Mistakes we did enjoy include the use of dynamite in Tap Roots, which was set in 1860 (dynamite was not invented until 1867); the British Railways signs in Cockleshell Heroes, set during World War II (British Railways was formed in 1948); the death of Laird Cregar by Tower Bridge in The Lodger, set several years before Tower Bridge was built; the modern lounge suits sported by Colin Clive in James Whale's Frankenstein films, otherwise apparently set in nineteenth-century Europe and the stirrups used by the riders in King Arthur 04, set in Roman Britain. which were not invented until several centuries later. Even TV movies are not immune: The Triangle Factory Fire Scandal includes a Chaplin movie visit but is set in 1909 before Chaplin made a film. But then, even Shakespeare put a striking clock in Julius Caesar.

Ancient Egypt

has not been a popular stopping place for movie-makers. Several films based on the Bible, notably The Ten Commandments, have stayed awhile, and there were detailed reconstructions in The Egyptian, Land of the Pharaohs, and Kawalerowicz's Pharaoh. Otherwise it has been most frequently seen in flashbacks in The Mummy and its sequels.

angels

made appearances in many silent films: Intolerance, The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse, The Sorrows of Satan, and the many versions of Uncle Tom's Cabin and Faust were among them. Since sound they have remained a favourite Hollywood device, but have naturally tended to lose their wings and become more whimsical, less awesome and often of somewhat ambiguous reality, to be explained away in the last reel as a result of the hero's bump on the head. The last completely serious angels were probably those in the all black Green Pastures 37; since then they have been played by Claude Rains in Here Comes Mr Jordan, Jeanette MacDonald in I Married an Angel, Kenneth Spencer (and others) in Cabin in the Sky, Jack Benny (and others) in The Horn Blows at Midnight, Clifton Webb and Edmund Gwenn in For Heaven's Sake, Henry Travers in It's a Wonderful Life, Leon Ames in Yolanda and the Thief, Kathleen Byron and a great many extras in A Matter of Life and Death, Robert Cummings in Heaven Only Knows, Cary Grant in The Bishop's Wife, several actors in Angels in the Outfield, James Mason in Forever Darling, Diane Cilento in The Angel Who Pawned Her Harp, John Phillip Law in Barbarella, Harry Belafonte in The Angel Levine, Bruno Ganz (and others) in Wings of Desire, and Nicolas Cage (and others) in its American re-make City of Angels. In 1978 Warren Beatty remade Here Comes Mr Jordan as Heaven Can Wait and spawned several ineffective TV imitations including Ray Bolger in Heaven Only Knows.

Used in a figurative sense, the word 'angel' has continued to be a favourite title component: I'm No Angel, Angel, The Dark Angel, Angels with Dirty Faces, Angels Wash Their Faces, Angel and the Badman, Angel Face, Angel Baby, Angels in Disguise, The Angel Wore Red, Angels One Five, Angels in Exile, etc.

as Walt Disney knew, are a sure way to success at the box office, with dogs well established as number-one providers. Dog stars of the movies have included Rin Tin Tin, Strongheart (his closest rival), Ben (Mack Sennett's comedy dog), Pete (of 'Our Gang'), Asta (of the 'Thin Man' series), Daisy (so popular in the 'Blondie' films that he starred in his own movies), Scruffy, a mongrel in some British movies of the 30s, and of course the immortal Lassie. Less publicized canines have successfully taken on dramatic roles in such films as The Voice of Bugle Ann, Oliver Twist, Umberto D, Greyfriars Bobby, Owd Bob, Old Yeller, Savage Sam, Air Bud, The Ugly Dachshund and The Spy with ■ Cold Nose; while Dick Powell was reincarnated as a very handsome Alsatian in You Never Can Tell. Rhubarb has been the only 'starred' cat, though felines have played important roles in The Cat and the Canary, The Cat Creeps, Cat Girl, Shadow of the Cat, Breakfast at Tiffany's, The Incredible Journey, A Walk on the Wild Side, The Three Lives of Thomasina, That Darn Cat, The Torture Garden (with its diabolical pussy), The Wrong Box, The Goldwyn Follies (in which the Ritz Brothers were memorably assisted by hundreds of cats to sing 'Hey Pussy Pussy'), The Bluebird (in which a sleek black feline was humanized very satisfyingly into Gale Sondergaard), The Tomb of Ligeia, Eye of the Cat, Stuart Little, and several versions of The Black Cat.

Other animals to achieve something like stardom have included Balthasar the donkey, Flipper the dolphin, Gentle Ben the bear, Cheta the chimp (in the Tarzan films), Slicker the seal (in Spawn of the North), the chimp in The Barefoot Executive, Clarence the Cross-eyed Lion (not to mention Fluffy), the Zebra in the Kitchen, and a great many horses including Rex (King of the Wild Horses), Tarzan (with Ken Maynard), Fritz (with William S. Hart), Tony (with Tom Mix), Silver (with Buck Jones), Champion (with Gene Autry) and Trigger (with Roy Rogers). Born Free and its sequels made stars of lions; Ring of Bright Water and Tarka the Otter did the same for otters, and Benji for a little dog; then there was The Belstone Fox; the deer in The Yearling; the dolphins in The Day of the Dolphin; the bear in Grizzly; the host of assorted animals in Doctor Dolittle; the bear cub in The Bear; the kitten and puppy in Milo and Otis; and the killer whale in the Free Willy series. Perhaps one shouldn't count the computer-generated eponymous mouse in the otherwise live-action Stuart Little, the mix of real and puppet animals in Cats & Dogs or the anthropoids in Planet of the Apes.

anti-Semitism

was understandably not a popular subject with film-makers when the function of movies was simply to entertain. Amiable comic Jews were permitted, in Abie's Irish Rose, Potash and Perlmutter, and the Cohen and Kelly series; and it was readily acknowledged that Jewry provided a flow of star talent without which show business could not continue. But thoughtful movies on the Jewish plight were almost non-existent, unless one counts such epics as The Wandering Jew 33 and Jew Süss 34. Occasionally came a cry from Europe, as in Professor Mamlock 36, but it was not really until The Great Dictator 40 that the film-going public was made aware of what was happening to the Jews in Germany. For propaganda purposes the Nazis put out a number of anti-Semitic films such as Der Ewige Jude and another version of Jew Süss; the only real reply during World War II was a gentle British movie called Mr Emmanuel. In Tomorrow the World 44, from the play about an ex-Nazi youth in America, the subject was touched on; but not till the reconstruction days of 1947 could a spade really be called a spade. In a taut murder thriller called Crossfire, the victim was changed from a homosexual to a Jew; then came Gentleman's Agreement, in which a gentile reporter posed as a Jew to expose anti-Semitism in America. Perhaps this interest was stimulated by the immense popularity of The Jolson Story, with its sympathetic portrait of a Jewish home; but the confusion in American minds is demonstrated by the fact that David Lean's Oliver Twist was banned in 1948 because of Alec Guinness's 'caricature' of Fagin!

During the last decade or so there seems to have been sporadic interest in the subject. The birth of Israel generated such movies as Sword in the Desert, Exodus, Judith and Cast a Giant Shadow, and Christopher Isherwood's Berlin stories of the early 30s became first a play and film called I Am a Camera and later a musical and film called Cabaret. Poignant recollections of World War II by a girl who died in Auschwitz produced a book, play and film called The Diary of Anne Frank, and a little British film called Reach for Glory, which took a swipe at the consequences of intolerance. In 1971 the world's most successful stage musical, Fiddler on the Roof, was filmed; dealing with the Russian pogroms, the story has been filmed many times before in Yiddish, usually under the title Tevye the Milkman. The 70s saw the pendulum swinging to the extent that we were almost swamped by films and actors proclaiming their Jewishness: Barbra Streisand, Bette Midler, Woody Allen, Elliott Gould, George Segal. The plight of the Jews under Hitler was again explored in a dozen television epics including Inside the Third Reich, Blood and Honour, The Winds of War, The Wall and The House on Garibaldi Street and in the cinema in Steven Spielberg's Schindler's List, Robert Benigni's Life is Beautiful/La Vita è Bella and Roman Polanski's The Pianist; while feature films on the subject of Jewishness were The Pawnbroker and The Chosen. Kadosh 99 dealt with the problems of an ultra-orthodox Jew who divorces his barren wife so that he can have children.

Antoine Doinel.

A character who served as an alter ego for director François Truffaut in a series of semi-autobiographical films, each starring over a period of 20 years Jean-Pierre Léaud, who was 13 when he was picked to play the role in The 400 Blows/Les Quatre Cents Coups 59, the first of the sequence. It was followed by Antoine et Colette, part of the compilation film Love at Twenty/L'Amour à 20 Ans 62, Stolen Kisses/Baisers Volés 68, Bed and Board/ Domicile Conjugal 70, and Love on the Run/Amour en Fuite 79, a series which follows Doinel from his unhappy adolescence and dead-end jobs to his becoming a writer, a lover, an unhappy husband and a father. Truffaut once wrote, 'The character of Antoine Doinel is always on the run, always late, a young man in a hurry.'

have always been popular, and most well-known comedians have at least one to their credit. Laurel and Hardy were in Pack Up Your Troubles and Blockheads and Great Guns; Abbott and Costello in Buck Privates; Wheeler and Woolsey in Half Shot at Sunrise; Buster Keaton in The Dough Boys; Charlie Chaplin in Shoulder Arms; Harry Langdon in A Soldier's Plaything; Larry Semon in Spuds; George Jessel in Private Izzy Murray; Joe E. Brown in Sons of Guns; Jimmy Durante and Phil Silvers in You're in the Army Now; The Ritz Brothers in We're in the Army Now; Norman Wisdom in The Square Peg; Jerry Lewis in The Sad Sack; Dean Martin and Lewis in At War With The Army; Bob Hope in Caught In the Draft; Frank Randle in Somewhere In England; Arthur Lucan in Old Mother Riley Joins Up; George K. Arthur and Karl Dane in Rookies; Wallace Beery and Raymond Hatton in Behind The Front; Alan Carney and Wally Brown in Adventures of A Rookie and Rookies In Burma; Joe Sawyer and William Tracy in several comedies including Tanks a Million, About Face and Fall In; Tom Wilson and Heinie Conklin in Ham And Eggs at the Front; George Sidney and Charlie Murray in Lost at the Front.

Other American successes in the genre include: What Did You Do In The War, Daddy?; Two Arabian Knights; What Price Glory?; The Cockeyed World; Top Sergeant Mulligan; The Teahouse of The August Moon; The Wackiest Ship In the Army; Operation Mad Ball, and above all *M*A*S*H*. Britain has provided Carry On Sergeant; Private's Progress; On The Fiddle; I Only Arsked; Idle On Parade and Reluctant Heroes.

Outstanding TV series: Britain's The Army Game and Hollywood's Bilko series with Phil Silvers; *Hogan's Heroes; McHale's Navy; Gomer Pyle U.S.M.C.; M*A*S*H.*

Around the World in 80 Days

Jules Verne's story of Phileas Fogg, a Victorian gentleman who bets that he can use the latest means of transport to circle the globe, has been filmed twice. The flamboyant Michael Todd produced a lavish version, directed by Michael Anderson, in 1956. Its attraction to audiences was not so much its story as spotting the legion of famous faces that popped up in supporting roles to David Niven as Fogg and Cantiflas as his servant Passepartout. Frank Coraci directed a new version in 2004 designed to show off the comic talents of Jackie Chan, but it failed to attract an audience.

Arsène Lupin.

The gallant French jewel thief and part-time detective, created at the beginning of the century by Maurice Leblanc, has been the subject of many films, the first being a Vitagraph 1917 version starring Earle Williams. In 1932 the Barrymore brothers were in Arsène Lupin, John taking the title role; in 1938 Melvyn Douglas was in Arsène Lupin Returns; Charles Korvin took over in 1944 for Enter Arsène Lupin; in 1957 there was Robert Lamoureux in The Adventures of Arsène Lupin; in 1962 Jean-Claude Brialy starred in Arsène Lupin Contre Arsène Lupin; in 2004 Romain Duris played the title role in Arsène Lupin. A French TV series ran during the 70s. An animated French-Canadian TV series, aimed at children, aired during the 90s.

Arthur.

The legendary British king of the 5th or 6th century, central figure of the courtly love tradition and alleged creator not only of the democratic Round Table but of the idyllic city and palace of Camelot, has figured in several movies, especially in recent years when we seem to have had need to cherish our legends. There have been three sound versions, to begin with, of A Connecticut Yankee at King Arthur's Court; in the 1949 version Cedric Hardwicke played the King as having a perpetual cold. In 1942, Arthur Askey dreamed he was a member of the Round Table in King Arthur Was a Gentleman. In 1964 Disney presented in cartoon form the childhood of Arthur in The Sword in the Stone. In slightly more serious vein, Mel Ferrer was Arthur in Knights of the Round Table 54, with Robert Taylor as Lancelot and Ava Gardner as Guinevere. Anthony Bushell had the role in The Black Knight 54 and Mark Dignam took over in Siege of the Saxons 64. In the 1963 Lancelot and Guinevere, the three roles were taken respectively by Brian Aherne, Cornel Wilde and Jean Wallace; in the 1967 musical Camelot, by Richard Harris, Franco Nero, and Vanessa Redgrave. In the 70s there came Bresson's Lancelot du Lac and Rohmer's Perceval. In 1980 John Boorman gave us a noisy, violent version of the legend, Excalibur. In First Knight 95, Sean Connery played Arthur to Juliet Ormond's Guinevere and Richard Gere's Lancelot (who remained a modern Yankee at King Arthur's court) but the film failed to find much of a public. It has become harder to take the legends seriously since they were treated with much irreverence in Monty Python and the Holy Grail 75. Despite Python's example, Merlin: The Return 00 brought Patrick Bergin's Arthur and Rik Mayall's Merlin into the present day, with unintentionally risible results. King Arthur 04 made claims for historical accuracy, setting the action in 300 AD at the time of the collapse of the Roman Empire. It starred Clive Owen as Arthur, Ioan Gruffudd as Lancelot and Keira Knightley in a fetchingly brief leather outfit as Guinevere.

TV series on the subject have included Sir Lancelot, an Australian cartoon series called Arthur!, and a Welsh serial called Arthur of The Britons. There were also TV movies, Arthur the King, and Merlin 98, which had Sam Neill in the title role as a tutor to Paul Curran's King.

Asphalt Jungle

W. R. Burnett's 1949 thriller of an old criminal who plans one last big robbery before he retires has been filmed four times by MGM, most notably in a version directed by John Huston in 1950. Delmer Daves remade it, none too well, in 1958 as a western The Badlanders, about two ex-convicts attempting to rob a goldmine; Wolf Rilla directed it as Cairo, a version set in Egypt, with crooks planning to steal Tutankhamun's treasure; finally, in 1972 it was transformed into the blaxploitation thriller Cool Breeze, directed by Barry Pollack.

assassination

has not been a favourite film subject, though historical incidents have been examined in Julius Caesar, Sarajevo, Nicholas and Alexandra, Nine Hours to Rama, The Assassination of Trotsky, Gandhi, The Parallax View and JFK. Assassination attempts have figured in Suddenly, The Man Who Knew Too Much, Foreign Correspondent, The Manchurian Candidate, The Day of the Jackal and the South Korean Silmido 03, based on a true story about two failed attempts to kill the leaders of North and South Korea. The assassination of President Kennedy, and its aftermath, was the subject of Oliver Stone's JFK 91, while The Day of the Jackal was remade as The Jackal 97, in which the target was the First Lady. In Stephen Spielberg's Munich 05, Israeli agents track down and kill the Palestinian terrorists responsible for the kidnap and murder of eleven Israeli athletes at the 1972 Olympic Games.

Asterix.

Cunning, diminutive, moustachioed Gaul, the hero of strip cartoons created by Alberto Uderzo and René Goscinny. The stories, about a village of Gauls that the invading Romans are unable to defeat, satirize many aspects of contemporary life. Less successful are the series of animated films based on the books. In 1999 came Asterix and Obelix vs Caesar, starring Gérard Depardieu, a live-action version of the stories that was the most expensive French film so far made. It was followed by the live-action Asterix and Obelix Meet Cleopatra, 02, which was popular in France.

Asterix the Gaul 67. Asterix and Cleopatra 70. The Twelve Labours of Asterix 75. Asterix in Britain 86. Asterix and the Big Fight 89, etc.

Austin Powers.

The British secret agent whose attitudes are stuck in the psychedelic 60s was created by Canadian comic actor Michael Myers. He was a latecomer to jokes at the expense of such agents as Harry Palmer and James Bond, who had been spoofed in the Matt Helm series and others. The first Powers film Austin Powers: International Man of Mystery 97 was a moderate success. But two sequels, Austin Powers: The Spy Who Shagged Me 99 and Austin Powers in Goldmember 02, each took more than $200m at the US box-office.

authors as actors are few. Alexander Woollcott once had fun playing opposite Noël Coward in The Scoundrel; Irvin S. Cobb tried to take over the mantle of Will Rogers on the latter's death; Mickey Spillane played his own hero Mike Hammer in The Girl Hunters and also appeared in Ring of Fear. Otherwise literary lions have aspired only to bit parts, such as Compton Mackenzie in Whisky Galore and Hugh Walpole in David Copperfield. Somerset Maugham did contribute lengthy introductions to three compendiums of his short stories, but they were virtually eliminated from the release prints. Jacqueline Susann and Peter Benchley appeared as interviewers in Valley of the Dolls and Jaws respectively. Writer-director Bryan Forbes did become a popular juvenile in the 50s, and John Osborne turned villain in Get Carter, while Truman Capote was the sinister host of Murder by Death. Norman Mailer has popped up in a dozen or so films, usually playing himself, and Gore Vidal has also made appearances, usually as himself, but occasionally as a politician. Stephen King is another author who also likes to appear in films based on his books. Actors who became authors include David Niven, Dirk Bogarde, Ruth Chatterton, Mary Astor, Elissa Landi, Errol Flynn, Corinne Griffith, Vincent Price and Ethan Hawke; and many others wrote autobiographies, more or less unaided.

with personality enough to become movie titles include Genevieve, The Fast Lady, La Belle Américaine, The Solid Gold Cadillac, The Yellow Rolls-Royce, Chitty Chitty Bang Bang, The Gnome-Mobile and The Love Bug. Other cars with individuality were James Bond's tricksy Aston Martin in Goldfinger and the one that ran on two wheels in Diamonds are Forever; the Flying Wombat in The Young at Heart; the gadget-filled limousine in Only Two Can Play; Batman's Batmobile; the airborne Model T in The Absent-minded Professor. The Model T was also Laurel and Hardy's favourite car, and they wrecked a great many in their time; other old cars were featured in The Reivers and TV's The Beverly Hillbillies. Multitudes of old and strange cars were featured in The Great Race, It's a Mad Mad Mad Mad World, Monte Carlo or Bust.

Comic car chases have been featured by Mack Sennett, Abbott and Costello, W. C. Fields and countless other comedians, and a new car was splendidly wrecked in Tobacco Road. Realistic chases became more and more violent in the 70s. Bullitt and The French Connection were box-office hits almost for this reason alone, and imitations included Robbery, Vanishing Point, Freebie and the Bean, The Car, The Driver, The Blues Brothers, Smokey and the Bandit, Every Which Way But Loose, The Gauntlet, Carquake, The Cannonball Run, The Hunter, Gone in Sixty Seconds and The Fast and the Furious.

The Cars That Ate Paris dealt with a small Australian town that survived by casuing car crashes and salvaging the remains; while Crash 96 featured a couple who got an erotic charge from car accidents. Francis Ford Coppola's Tucker: The Man and His Dream was a rarity in dealing with a visionary car designer.

The best television film of the genre was undoubtedly Duel, but series from The Dukes of Hazzard to T. J. Hooker based their appeal on the number of cars crashed each week. The ultimate spoof was probably Knight Rider, in which the car became a secondary hero, talking back to its master and making most of his decisions.

The Avengers.

Camp English television series, created by Sydney Newman and Leonard White, and featuring John Steed, a suave, bowler-hatted, tightly-rolled-umbrella-wielding secret agent with a tough female sidekick. Patrick McNee starred, and his assistants were played by Honor Blackman, as Cathy Gale, Diana Rigg, as Emma Peel (whose name derived from the search for something with 'man appeal', which was then shortened to 'M appeal'), Linda Thorsen, as Tara King, and Joanna Lumley, as Purdey. It ran from 1961 to 1969, and, as The New Avengers, from 1976 to 1977, and appeared on American TV for three series from 1966. A film version was released in 1998, starring Ralph Fiennes and Uma Thurman, and intended to be the start of a series, but it was a critical and financial failure.

Book: 1997, The Avengers by Toby Miller.

Babe

was the pig-hero of two films, Babe and Babe: Pig in the City, based on a children's book by Dick King-Smith. George Miller, who produced both films and directed the second, has said that he regarded the character as a classical mythical hero, as defined by Joseph Campbell: 'an agent of change who relinquishes self-interest and breaks down the established social order'. In each film, 50 female piglets were used in the leading role and the hundred were all guaranteed a life away from slaughter houses. Babe, directed by Chris Noonan, was a box-office success, but the sequel, which cost around $90m, failed at the box-office.

who have achieved screen stardom include Baby Parsons and Baby Peggy in silent days, Baby Le Roy in the early 30s and Baby Sandy in the early 40s. Shirley Temple and the Our Gang cast were scarcely weaned when they hit the big time. Other films about particular babies include Bachelor Mother, Bobbikins, and A Diary for Timothy. Baby's Day Out 94 proved that a small child was more than a match for incompetent kidnappers.

There was a shortlived TV series about a talking baby called Happy, a trend that reached the cinema with Look Who's Talking 89, Look Who's Talking Too 90, and Look Who's Talking Now 93, and Lucille Ball worked her own confinement into her weekly half-hour. More recently there has been a lamentable fashion for diabolical infants: Rosemary's Baby, It's Alive, I Don't Want to be Born, The Devil within Her, The Exorcist, The Omen and Damien: Omen II.

Back Street.

Fanny Hurst's novel about a married man and his suffering mistress has been filmed three times: in 1932, directed by John Stahl, 1941, directed by Robert Stevenson, and 1961, directed by David Miller.

backstage is a term suggesting musicals about putting on a show. But other types of film have taken place mainly or climactically in this area. Thrillers: The Velvet Touch, Stage Fright, The Phantom of the Opera, Charlie Chan at the Opera, Cover Girl Killer, Murder at the Vanities, The G-String Murders, Theatre of Death. Dramas: A Double Life, Applause, The Blue Angel, Limelight, Les Enfants du Paradis, Act One, Peter's Friends, Center Stage. Comedies: A Night at the Opera, Hellzapoppin, The Guardsman, The Royal Family of Broadway, Curtain Up, etc. Musicals themselves got off to a pretty good start in the early 30s, best and most typical of them being 42nd Street, which was amiably spoofed in Movie Movie 78.

sequences have been a boon to many indifferent films, permitting a brief glimpse into a world that is strange, alarming, but graceful and glamorous. From the time of The Goldwyn Follies 38, any Hollywood musical with aspirations had to have a ballet sequence, some of the most memorable being in The Pirate, On the Town, An American in Paris, Singin' in the Rain, and The Band Wagon. The custom died out in the 50s, since when there has been an over-abundance of unimaginatively presented full-length stage ballets with famous dancing stars. These, filmed at low cost, have found a market, but expensive film ballets like Tales of Hoffman, Invitation to the Dance and Black Tights had tougher going. Dramatic films set in the ballet world have included La Mort du Cygne (remade in Hollywood as The Unfinished Dance), The Red Shoes and The Spectre of the Rose; lighter stories in which the heroine is a ballerina (usually a novice) include Waterloo Bridge, Carnival, Dance Little Lady, On Your Toes and St Martin's Lane. Several comedians have found themselves pursued by plot complications on to a stage and forced to take part clumsily in the ballet in progress: Jack Buchanan in That's a Good Girl, Danny Kaye in Knock on Wood, Morecambe and Wise in The Intelligence Men; even Laurel and Hardy donned tutus in The Dancing Masters.

By the 70s, ballet had lost its general popularity. Nijinsky accentuated the homosexual element. Rudolf Nureyev, on film in several straight ballets, turned actor as Valentino. Following him came fellow Russian Mikhail Baryshnikov who, in The Turning Point 77, not only danced but was nominated for an Oscar as best supporting actor. With the same director, Herbert Ross, he tried for something similar ten years later in Dancers, but without the same impact. Perhaps the boldest attempt to bring ballet to the big screen so far has been Carroll Ballard's Nutcracker: The Motion Picture in 86. In 2000, Stephen Daldry directed the affecting Billy Elliot, starring Jamie Bell as a miner's young son who overcomes prejudice to become a ballet dancer.

Barney Bear.

Ponderous, affable, dim-witted grizzly who was a star of MGM cartoons from 1939-54. His voice was supplied by Bill Bletcher, Rudolph Ising and Paul Frees.

The Bear that Couldn't Sleep 39. The Fishing Bear 40. The Flying Bear 41. Barney Bear's Victory Garden 42. Bah Wilderness 43. Bear Raid Warden 44. Busybody Bear 52. Heir Bear 53. Bird-Brain Bird Dog 54, etc.

baseball has been the subject for occasional films since 1899, when Casey at the Bat was first made. (It turned up again in 1927 with Wallace Beery.) Biopics of famous baseball personalities include The Stratton Story (James Stewart), The Babe Ruth Story (William Bendix), The Pride of the Yankees (Gary Cooper as Lou Gehrig), The Winning Team (Ronald Reagan as G. C. Alexander), The Pride of St Louis (Dan Dailey as Dizzy Dean), Fear Strikes Out (Anthony Perkins as Jim Piersall), The Jackie Robinson Story, Babe, with John Goodman as Babe Ruth, and Cobb, with Tommy Lee Jones as Ty Cobb. Serious dramatic films about the sport include The Bush Leaguer, Slide Kelly Slide, The Big Leaguer, The Natural, Field of Dreams, Hard Ball, For Love of the Game and The Rookie. Baseball's biggest scandal, involving the Chicago White Sox of 1919, was treated sympathetically in Eight Men Out. There has been a fantasy, Angels in the Outfield, and a who-done-it, Death on the Diamond. Musicals are led by Take Me Out to the Ball Game and Damn Yankees. Comedies include Elmer the Great, Alibi Ike, Fast Company, Rhubarb, It Happens Every Spring, Speedy (Harold Lloyd), College (Buster Keaton), Ladies' Day, The Bad News Bears and its sequels, Major League and A League of Their Own, about a female team. Baseball stadiums have provided memorable scenes in films on other subjects: The FBI Story, Beau James, The Satan Bug, Experiment in Terror, etc.

bathtubs,

though especially associated with Cecil B. De Mille, have been a favourite Hollywood gimmick from early silent days. But De Mille undressed his heroines with the most showmanship, whether it was Gloria Swanson in Male and Female, Claudette Colbert in her asses' milk in The Sign of the Cross (emulated years later by Frances Day in Fiddlers Three) or Paulette Goddard in Unconquered. Other ladies who have bathed spectacularly include Joan Crawford in The Women, Deanna Durbin in Can't Help Singing, Jean Harlow in Red Dust, Phyllis Haver in The Politic Flapper, Joan Collins in The Wayward Bus, Elke Sommer in The Wicked Dreams of Paula Schultz, Gina Lollobrigida in Belles de Nuit, Carroll Baker in Harlow and Sophia Loren (who had Gregory Peck hiding in her shower) in Arabesque. Not that the men have had it all their own way: Roger Livesey in Colonel Blimp and Gary Cooper in Love in the Afternoon suffered in the steamroom; and all the actors who have played coal miners, including Trevor Howard in Sons and Lovers and Donald Crisp in How Green Was My Valley, know how it feels to be scrubbed all over. Marat in Marat/Sade spent the whole film in a tub. The most bathed male star is probably Cary Grant, who had a tub in The Howards of Virginia, a shower in Mr Blandings Builds His Dream House, another shower, fully clothed this time, in Charade, and a Japanese geisha bath in Walk, Don't Run. And Hitchcock, with Psycho, still takes the prize for the most memorable shower scene.

Batman.

An American comic strip character created in 1939 by Bob Kane, Batman was a personable millionaire who, with his young helper Robin, donned fancy dress to fight the evil forces in society, and zoomed about in a 'batmobile' with many a pow and a splat. His chief enemies were the Riddler, the Penguin, the Joker and Catwoman. He came to the big screen in two serials, and was played in 1943 by Lewis Wilson and in 1949 by Robert Lowery. A TV series in 1965-67 starred Adam West with Burt Ward, and the villains were played by Frank Gorshin, Burgess Meredith, Cesar Romero and Lee Meriwether. A feature version emerged in 1966. In 1989 a new version transformed him into a semi-psychotic character, with Michael Keaton in the title role. A sequel, Batman Returns, followed in 1992, and Batman Forever, with Val Kilmer replacing Keaton, in 1995. Kilmer left to play the Saint and, in 1997, the role was taken over by George Clooney in Batman and Robin. Catwoman 04, starring Halle Berry, was a failed attempt to create a spinoff featuring one of Batman's more charismatic opponents. Christian Bale played the title role in Batman Begins 05, which was intended to restart the series on a more serious note.

Ben Hur.

There were several silent versions of Lew Wallace's semi-biblical adventure novel. Best known is MGM's lavish spectacular of 1926, directed by Fred Niblo with Ramon Navarro and Francis X. Bushman; it was reissued with sound effects in 1931. In 1959 it was remade by MGM and William Wyler, with Charlton Heston and Stephen Boyd: the greatest praise went to the chariot race sequence directed by Andrew Marton with the assistance of Yakima Canutt.

Berkeley Square,

a play written by John Balderston in 1926, about a man who becomes his 18th century ancestor, has been filmed twice: in 1933, directed by Frank Lloyd and starring Leslie Howard, and in 1951, directed by Roy Ward Baker and starring Tyrone Power, under the titles The House in the Square/I'll Never Forget You. TV versions came in 1951, directed by Donald Davis, and starring Richard Greene, and in 1951 directed by George Schaefer and starring John Kerr. The first version remains the best.

Berlin

has seemed to film-makers a grim grey city, and history provides obvious reasons for this. Standard attitudes are shown in The Murderers Are Amongst Us, Germany Year Zero, Four Men in a Jeep, Hotel Berlin, Berlin Express, The Man Between, Night People, The Big Lift, I Am a Camera, The Spy Who Came in from the Cold, The Man Who Finally Died, A Prize of Gold, The Quiller Memorandum, Cabaret, Escape from East Berlin, Funeral in Berlin. Wim Wenders made it a city watched over by angels in Wings of Desire/Der Himmel über Berlin. But some people have found fun there, notably Billy Wilder in People on Sunday, A Foreign Affair and One Two Three; and in 1928 Walter Ruttman's stylishly kaleidoscopic documentary, Berlin: Symphony of a Great City, showed the place and its people to be just as sympathetic as anywhere else if they are understandingly portrayed.

Betty Boop.

Doll-like cartoon creation, a wide-eyed gold-digging flapper created by animator Grim Natwick for Max Fleischer in the 1932 cartoon Any Rags. She was censored by Will H. Hays in 1935. She was developed from a dog who appeared in Dizzy Dishes in 1930, in which she was chased by Fleischer's dog star Bimbo, who first appeared in the early 20s. The cartoons she featured in were wildly imaginative and usually made comments on the social follies of their time; in the 70s they became popular through compilation features. She was based on the 'boop-a-doop' singer Helen Kane, with her voice being provided by Mae Questel.

Beverly Hills.

Residential area of Los Angeles, home to many of Hollywood's seriously rich. It has come to be synonymous with wealth, excess and conspicuous consumption. Since the 80s, it has gained wider fame through its use in movie titles and from the teenage sitcom Beverly Hills 90210.

The Beverly Hillbillies 93. Beverly Hills Cop III 94. Pterodactyl Woman of Beverly Hills 94. Beverly Hills Ninja 97, etc.

“ With an area of less than 6 square miles and a population barely exceeding 30,000 – only 20,000 of whom are old enough to vote – Beverly Hills supports 35 banks, 299 beauty salons, 651 medical doctors and psychoanalysts, and 761 gardeners.

The Bible.

The extravaganza which claimed to be the 'film of the book' was conceived by Dino de Laurentiis as a nine-hour survey by several directors. It turned up in 1966 as a slow plod through Genesis by and with John Huston. Of the hundreds of films which have been inspired by the Old Testament stories, some of the most memorable are The Private Life of Adam and Eve, Sodom and Gomorrah, Green Pastures, A Story of David, David and Bathsheba, Samson and Delilah, The Prodigal, The Ten Commandments (two versions), Salome, Esther and the King and The Story of Ruth. For the New Testament, see under Christ; the immediate effects of whose life have been treated in such assorted films as The Robe, Demetrius and the Gladiators, The Sign of the Cross, The Big Fisherman, Quo Vadis, Ben Hur, Spartacus, Fabiola, Barabbas, The Silver Chalice, The Fall of the Roman Empire, The Last Temptation of Christ and The Passion of The Christ, not to mention Lord Grade's six-hour Jesus of Nazareth for TV (a 'sequel' to his Moses). All this activity sparked off in 1978 a rather naive American TV series, Greatest Heroes of the Bible.

was outside the range of silent movie-makers, but in the 30s, usually personified by Edward Arnold, it became a useful villain for the comedies and dramas of social conscience. A switch was made in Dodsworth, in which the businessman became an innocent abroad; but not until the growing affluence of the 50s did Hollywood think it worth while to probe into the personal lives of those who occupy the corridors of power. Then in quick succession we had Executive Suite, Woman's World, Patterns of Power, The Power and the Prize and The Man in the Grey Flannel Suit; while the inevitable knocking process began as early as The Man in the White Suit and continued with The Solid Gold Cadillac, Cash McCall, Ice Palace, The Apartment, The Wheeler Dealers, Wall Street, Other People's Money, The Hudsucker Proxy and The Boiler Room.

have been prevented by the censorship codes from achieving hero status in more than a few films; perhaps it is significant that although the Italian film called The Bigamist is a comedy, the American one is a solemn affair. Over the years, however, scriptwriters have achieved some sympathy and humour for the characters played by William Bendix in Don Juan Quilligan, Alec Guinness in The Captain's Paradise, Clifton Webb in The Remarkable Mr Pennypacker, Rex Harrison in The Constant Husband, Jean-Claude Drouot in Le Bonheur and Leo McKern in Decline and Fall. Rodney Dangerfield took the notion to excessive lengths in his comedy My Five Wives.

fit nicely into the glamorous romantic backgrounds of which Hollywood used to be so fond, but a few particular examples have been malevolent, including The Vulture, the owner of The Giant Claw, the carnivorous birds which nearly pecked Barbarella to death, and of course The Birds which turned on the human race in Hitchcock's 1963 movie. (In the various versions of Edgar Allan Poe's The Raven, the title character has been almost irrelevant.) Other notable birds have been seen in Treasure Island, Birdman of Alcatraz, The Pigeon That Took Rome, Run Wild Run Free, The Bluebird, Kes, Doctor Dolittle, Bill and Coo, and Paulie; and in the cartoon field one must remember with affection Donald and Daffy Duck, Tweetie Pie, the Road Runner, and an assortment of other feathered friends. The heroes of Brewster McCloud, Birdy and several other films thought they were birds; Jonathan Livingston Seagull was. Mr Drake's Duck and his Disney lookalike The Million Dollar Duck laid extremely valuable eggs. The pelican in Storm Boy stole the show from the hero; and the birds in Tawny Pipit and Conflict of Wings upset whole countrysides. In Fly Away Home, a young girl and her father teach a flock of orphaned Canada geese to fly south for the winter. The documentary Winged Migration provided an around the world bird's eye view of migrating species.

The Bishop's Wife was based on Robert Nathan's novel about an angel who improves a bishop's attitude to his neglected wife and parishioners. A light comedy, it was directed by Henry Koster in 1947 after William A. Seiter was removed halfway through shooting, and starred Cary Grant, Loretta Young and David Niven, winning four Oscar nominations, including those for best film and best director. In 1996, it was remade by Penny Marshall and retitled The Preacher's Wife, starring Denzel Washington as the angel, and Whitney Houston.

finds humour in serious matters such as death, neurosis and sex perversion. In recent years it has become almost normal, though such films as A Clockwork Orange still cause controversy. We were once less sophisticated: in the early 30s, for instance, the comedy element in horror films such as James Whale's The Bride of Frankenstein and The Old Dark House was not understood, and even now is difficult to maintain on the same level, though Hammer films make sporadic attempts in this direction, and Roger Corman was rather more successful in The Raven. (Roman Polanski failed spectacularly in The Fearless Vampire Killers.) Comedies of murder date back to The Front Page and Boudu Sauvé des Eaux, with a progression through Drôle de Drame, A Slight Case of Murder, Arsenic and Old Lace, Monsieur Verdoux, Kind Hearts and Coronets, The Red Inn, The Criminal Life of Archibaldo de la Cruz, The Naked Truth, She'll Have to Go, Candy and The Assassination Bureau. Death and funerals have been the subject of jest in Here Comes Mr Jordan, Too Many Crooks, The Loved One, The Wrong Box, Loot, and Harold and Maude. On the level of social behaviour, there is black humour in Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?, The Anniversary and The Honey Pot, while Luis Buñuel castigates society through similar means in most of his films, notably El, The Exterminating Angel and The Diary of a Chambermaid. Dr Strangelove managed to laugh at the destruction of the world. Finally, Laurel and Hardy understood one aspect of the genre in their many grotesque jokes involving physical distortion. Elements of black comedy are to be found in the work of Billy Wilder, John Huston and Alfred Hitchcock, in the adventures of James Bond, and the action films of Arnold Schwarzenegger. It can also be found in the films of many modern directors, including Gregg Araki, Doug Liman, Neil LaBute, Don Roos, David O. Russell and Todd Solondz.

in films have only slowly attained equal status with whites. In early silents they were invariably depicted as slaves, a fact encouraged by the several popular versions of Uncle Tom's Cabin. If a film had a black role of consequence, it was usually played by a white man in blackface. But blacks began to make their own films for their own audiences, and still do, though these seldom get a general showing. The first all-black film was Darktown Jubilee in 1914, which was the year that D.W. Griffith made The Birth of a Nation, with its strong anti-black bias. Griffith atoned for this in The Greatest Thing in Life 18, in which a white soldier and a black embraced, but in 1922 he again incurred the wrath of colour-sensitive critics by making One Exciting Night, the first film to boast the quickly stereotyped figure of the terrified black manservant. Early talkies included such all-black films as Hearts in Dixie and Vidor's Hallelujah, and in 1933 Paul Robeson appeared in a version of Eugene O'Neill's The Emperor Jones. Much of the interest of Imitation of Life 34 centred on the problems of black servant Louise Beavers and her half-white daughter. In 1936 the screen version of Green Pastures, depicting the simple black's idea of the Bible, was widely acclaimed but tended to perpetuate a patronizing attitude. The feeling of the South for its blacks was strongly outlined in They Won't Forget 37 and Gone with the Wind 39. Stormy Weather 42 and Cabin in the Sky 43 were all-black musicals in Hollywood's best manner, but Tales of Manhattan 42 was retrogressive in showing blacks as inhabitants of a vast shanty town. In Casablanca 42, however, Dooley Wilson was accepted on equal terms by Humphrey Bogart. Disney's Song of the South 46, despite an engaging performance by James Baskett, brought back the old Uncle Remus image. The post-war period generally permitted the emergence of serious black actors like James Edwards and Sidney Poitier, and films on racial themes such as Intruder in the Dust and Pinky. At last, in 1965, came films in which a black could play a straight part utterly unrelated to his colour. Poitier did so in The Bedford Incident, then used colour defiantly in In the Heat of the Night and Guess Who's Coming to Dinner. Remakes of well known 'white' movies were one way to bring in a wide range of coloured actors: The Lost Man (Odd Man Out), Uptight (The Informer), Cool Breeze (The Asphalt Jungle). Even Barefoot in the Park became a black TV series. The subject was rather self-consciously aired in such films as Change of Mind, Watermelon Man, The Landlord and Medium Cool. In 1970 came Cotton Comes to Harlem, perhaps the first black thriller with no chip on its shoulder; in 1972 the seal of approval was set up by Shaft, a violent private-eye thriller with an all-black cast which proved not only acceptable to all audiences but highly commercial. The floodgates opened and before 1972 was out we even had Blacula and Blackenstein. Wholly black films which followed included Sounder, The Autobiography of Miss Jane Pittman (TV), Uptown Saturday Night, Let's Do It Again; and in 1977 a sensational impact was achieved by a TV serialization of Alex Haley's Roots, by watching which half of America sought to atone for centuries of bad white behaviour towards the blacks. Redd Foxx, a nightclub comedian, became a TV star in the 70s in Sanford and Son, based on the British series Steptoe and Son, followed by Sanford and The Redd Foxx Show in the 80s. At the same time, another comedian, Richard Pryor, was making a similar impact in films, particularly when teamed with Gene Wilder in Silver Streak and Stir Crazy. Following him came the fast-talking, self-confident Eddie Murphy, a hit on the TV show Saturday Night Live while still in his teens. The film 48 Hours established him as a Hollywood star, and Beverly Hills Cop confirmed his position as a big box-office attraction, although Harlem Nights, his attempt at writing and directing as well as acting, was not a success. Robert Townsend, also a comedian, turned his frustrations in Hollywood to comic account in Hollywood Shuffle, which also featured the talents of Keenan Wayans, who wrote, directed and starred in I'm Gonna Git You Sucka, a send-up of the 'blaxploitation' movies of the 70s, a genre which still lives on in the films of actor-director Fred Williamson. Newer comic actors treading the same path as Murphy include Martin Lawrence and Chris Rock.

From the mid-80s the talented director, actor and writer Spike Lee created a series of provocative, socially-conscious films dealing with uneasy relationships between white and black: She's Gotta Have It, School Daze, Do The Right Thing, Mo' Better Blues, Jungle Fever, Malcolm X, Crooklyn and Bamboozled. Lee's cinematographer, Ernest Dickerson, turned director with the powerful Juice, and the young John Singleton became the first director to be nominated for an Oscar for his first film with Boyz N the Hood, which probed into the reasons for the wasted lives of members of Los Angeles street gangs. Director Melvin Van Peebles had made one of the earliest and most significant films of black experience with Sweet Sweetback's Baadasssss Song in 1971. Twenty years later, his son Mario directed New Jack City, a violent anti-drug thriller that may have made a new star of rap performer Ice T. Actor Bill Duke returned to a Chester Himes novel to direct A Rage in Harlem in 1991, and followed it with Deep Cover in 92. Actors escaping from stereotyped roles include Wesley Snipes, Forest Whitaker, Danny Glover, Whoopi Goldberg and Morgan Freeman. The Wayans brothers were responsible for the slapdash comedy Scary Movie and its sequel that were box-office successes.

Denzel Washington won his second Oscar – his first as Best Actor – in the tough thriller Training Day and turned director in Antwone Fisher, about a black seaman who has a problem controlling his anger.

Britain, less affected by black problems, moved in parallel fashion: in the early 30s, films of The Kentucky Minstrels; then Paul Robeson dominating somewhat insulting material in Sanders of the River and subsequently earning three or four serious film vehicles of his own; the post-war attempt to understand in Men of Two Worlds; and problem pictures like Simba, about the Mau-Mau, and Flame in the Streets, about the prospect of a black in an East End family. The racism of British movies of the 30s is visible in the 90s on afternoon and late-night television screenings, where actors can still be seen putting coal-dust on their faces to pass as black, and you can still hear dialogue such as 'Whitemail? What's whitemail?' 'Blackmailing a nigger.' Comedian Lenny Henry is Britain's nearest equivalent to Eddie Murphy, though his success is so far confined to television. Director and writer Isaac Julien dealt with black experience in Britain in Young Soul Rebels, as did Greg Hall in The Plague 05. Saul Dibb's Bullet Boy 04 dealt with a young black Londoner trying to go straight and failing because of social pressures.

was a word coined to describe action movies of the 70s featuring black stars and intended for black audiences, though they enjoyed a wider public. The originator of the genre was Melvin van Peebles with his Sweet Sweetback's Baadasssss Song 71, which he produced, directed, wrote and starred in. The films that followed were less angry, more frivolous and often produced by the big studios or exploitation experts such as AIP. The most successful were those featuring Richard Roundtree (as Shaft), Ron O'Neal (as Superfly), Tamara Dobson (as Cleopatra Jones), Jim Brown (as Slaughter), Fred Williamson and Pam Grier. Music was sometimes provided by Isaac Hayes, who wrote the theme for Shaft. The genre also included horror movies, such as Blackula, and was later parodied by I'm Gonna Git You Sucka 88, written and directed by Keenen Ivory Wayans, while many of the 70s stars appeared together in Original Gangstas 96. In the 90s came a cycle of films about the toughness of black inner-city life, often involving rap performers such as Ice-T and Tupac Shakur, including Boyz N The Hood 91, New Jack City 91, directed by Mario van Peebles, Juice 92, and Menace II Society 93; these in turn were parodied by Fear of the Black Hat 93 and Don't Be a Menace to South Central While Drinking Your Juice in the Hood 96. In the mid-90s, the success of Waiting to Exhale, directed by Forest Whitaker from Terry McMillan's novel, gave producers a new market to target: black women. The gritty urban dramas of the early 90s were replaced by nostalgia, romance, and middle-class values in The Wood 99 and The Best Man 99. Relaxed, working-class comedy featured in The Wash, set in a car wash, and Barbershop and Barbershop 2.

a tragic affliction, has generally been treated by film-makers with discretion, though not without sentimentality. Typical is Herbert Marshall as the blind pianist in The Enchanted Cottage, dispensing words of wisdom with piano music in the background and the sounds of nature through the open door. Other sympathetic blind roles include Cary Grant in Wings in the Dark; Irene Dunne (and later Jane Wyman) in Magnificent Obsession; Ronald Colman (later Fredric March) in The Dark Angel; Colman also in The Light That Failed; Ralph Richardson (later Laurence Harvey and Wes Bentley) in The Four Feathers; James Cagney in City for Conquest; Ida Lupino in On Dangerous Ground; Arthur Kennedy in Bright Victory; Patricia Neal in Psyche '59 64; John Garfield in Pride of the Marines; Michele Morgan in La Symphonie Pastorale; Virginia Cherrill in City Lights; Elizabeth Hartman in A Patch of Blue; Michael Wilding in Torch Song; and Nicol Williamson in Laughter in the Dark. More sinister blind characters came in Saboteur and Victim; while blind detectives, not forgetting TV's Longstreet, include Edward Arnold in Eyes in the Night and The Hidden Eye, Van Johnson in 23 Paces to Baker Street, Dick Powell (briefly blinded by cordite fumes) in Murder My Sweet; and Karl Malden in Cat o' Nine Tails.

In thrillers, terrified blind heroines have been useful: Patricia Dainton in Witness in the Dark, Audrey Hepburn in Wait Until Dark and Mia Farrow in Blind Terror. Other tricks with blind characters were played in Faces in the Dark and Silent Dust, in both of which the hero's condition helped him to outwit his assailants; and Tread Softly Stranger, where the murderer gave himself away through fear of the only witness – who turned out to be blind. Afraid of the Dark had a blind woman threatened by a serial killer while Blink dealt with a woman who may have witnessed a murder as she regained her sight. In the Asian horror movie The Eye/Gin Gwai 02, a blind girl gets a cornea transplant and finds that she can see ghosts.

Genuinely blind actors include Esmond Knight (temporarily) playing a sighted role in The Silver Fleet, and Ray Charles in Ballad in Blue. A nice ironic point was made in Bride of Frankenstein, where O.P. Heggie as a blind hermit was the only human being who did not fear the monster.

The Japanese masseur, gambler and blind swordsman Zatoichi was the hero of 25 movies and a long-running TV series. Their success led to a short-lived series in the 1960s featuring a blind swordswoman known as The Crimson Bat. Blind Fury 89, an American variation on Zatoichi, starred Rutger Hauer as a swordfighting blind Vietnam veteran.

Lars von Trier's Dancer in the Dark was a musical about a woman going blind who fears the same fate awaits her son. Woody Allen turned the subject to comedy in Hollywood Ending, about a director striken with hysterical blindness while making a movie. And Ben Affleck provided a blind superhero in Daredevil.

Other films involving blindness include Night Song, Destiny, Man in the Dark, Afraid of the Dork, At First Sight. Finally, in The Day of the Triffids, almost everyone on earth was blinded.

boffins are research scientists working on hush-hush government projects. Their problems have been dramatized in such films as The Small Back Room, School for Secrets, Suspect, The Man in the Moon, The Satan Bug, The Andromeda Strain, The Atomic City and The Forbin Project.

Boston Blackie

was a jewel thief who became an upholder of law and order in 14 'B' features for Columbia in the 40s. They starred Chester Morris, with George E. Stone providing comic relief as his dim-witted friend The Runt, and Richard Lane as a suspicious detective inspector. Directors of the movies included Edward Dmytryk and Robert Florey. The character, created by writer Jack Boyle in stories dating from 1910, also featured in several silent movies from 1918 on, a radio series, and in a TV series from 1951 to 1953, starring Kent Taylor.

The Bowery Boys.

A gang of ageing, street-smart Brooklyn kids, who had their origins in Dead End, Sidney Kingsley's Broadway hit of 1935, and the subsequent 1937 film of the same name, directed by William Wyler. The popularity of the boys led to a series for Warner featuring the Dead End Kids. Some members then went to Universal to appear in Little Tough Guys and a series of half a dozen movies until the early 40s. Meanwhile others went to Monogram to create the East Side Kids, who made 22 films between 1940 and 1945. In 1946, Monogram merged the remaining members of the groups to create The Bowery Boys, who featured in 48 films between 1946 and 1958. The original members were Leo Gorcey (as Slip Mahoney), Huntz Hall (as Sach Jones), Gabriel Dell (as Gabe), Bobby Jordan – all original Dead End Kids — David Gorcey (aka David Condon), Bill Benedict and Bennie Bartlett. Jordan left the series after News Hounds in 1947, Dell quit in 1950, and Benedict a year later. The films also featured the Gorcey brothers' father, Bernard Gorcey.

Actual prizefighters whose lives have been fictionalized on film include Jim Corbett (Errol Flynn in Gentleman Jim), John L. Sullivan (Greg McClure in The Great John L), Joe Louis (Coley Wallace in The Joe Louis Story), Rocky Graziano (Paul Newman in Somebody Up There Likes Me), Jack Johnson (James Earl Jones in The Great White Hope), Jake La Motta (Robert DeNiro in Raging Bull), Ruben Carter (Denzel Washington in The Hurricane), Muhammad Ali (Will Smith in Ali) and Jim Braddock (Russell Crowe) in Cinderella Man. Purely fictional boxing films have tended to emphasize the corruption of the fight game: The Ring, The Square Ring, The Square Jungle, Iron Man, Kid Galahad, Kid Nightingale, The Champ, The Crowd Roars, Body and Soul, The Set Up, Champion, Golden Boy, No Way Back, The Good Die Young, Run With the Wind, The Harder They Fall, Shiner and from Europe Walkover and The Boxer. Boxing comedy is rare once one discounts the Joe Palooka series, but most comedians have taken part in boxing sequences: Abbott and Costello in Meet the Invisible Man, Harold Lloyd in The Milky Way, Danny Kaye in The Kid from Brooklyn, Chaplin in The Champion, etc. The only boxing fantasy was Here Comes Mr Jordan, in which Robert Montgomery's soul was transferred into that of a prizefighter. The most violent boxing film was undoubtedly Raging Bull, in which Robert DeNiro put on fifty pounds to play the ageing Jake La Motta. The ones that never knew when to quit were the sequence of movies starring Sylvester Stallone as Rocky Balboa, which lasted for five instalments.

The Brady Bunch.

Relentlessly cheerful American sitcom, running from 1969 to 1974, about a happy middle-class family in which a widow with three daughters married a widower with three sons. It was followed by the less successful The Brady Bunch Hour 77 and the bleaker The Bradys 90, all of which retained most of the original cast, including Robert Reed and Florence Henderson as husband and wife Mike and Carol Brady. A spin-off series, The Brady Brides, was seen briefly in 1981, and the animated The Brady Kids ran from 1972 to 1974. A film version in 1995 put the wholesome family, unchanged from the 70s, into a decidedly grungy 90s setting, with Shelley Long and Gary Cole as Mike and Carol Brady. It was followed by A Very Brady Sequel in 1996.

The British Empire

has provided a useful background for innumerable movies: some comic, some tragic, but most of them plain adventurous. The Elizabethan Adventurers roistered through films like The Sea Hawk, The Virgin Queen and Seven Seas to Calais; the westward voyage occupied Plymouth Adventure; Australia provided the canvas for Under Capricorn, Robbery Under Arms, and Botany Bay; Mutiny on the Bounty showed the British in the South Seas; Africa was the subject of Zulu, The Four Feathers, Khartoum, Sundown, Rhodes of Africa, The Sun Never Sets and (for the anti-British view) Ohm Krüger; and favourite of all far-flung outposts, India provided splendid terrain for such adventures as The Drum, Northwest Frontier, Gunga Din, King of the Khyber Rifles, The Rains Came, Charge of the Light Brigade and Lives of a Bengal Lancer. When the Empire was at its height, one could view the British influence as benevolent (Pacific Destiny), maiden-auntish (Sanders of the River), or merely acquisitive (Victoria the Great).

The inevitable break-up was rather less well covered. Even American independence has been played down by Hollywood producers with an eye on the British market, though of course it comes into such films as Last of the Mohicans, Lafayette, Daniel Boone, and even Disney's Ben and Me. Emergent Africa was the theme of Men of Two Worlds as long ago as 1946, but between that and the independent state depicted in Guns at Batasi came the Mau Mau period shown in Simba, Safari and Something of Value. The High Bright Sun dealt with Cyprus; The Planter's Wife and The Seventh Dawn with Malaya; Exodus, Judith and Cast a Giant Shadow with Israel; scores of films with the Irish troubles; Bhowani Junction and Nine Hours to Rama with India. But the emergence of new states is a painful business as a rule, and most of these films give the impression of so much tasteless picking at sore points. The unexpected 1982 success of Gandhi may, however, begin a more serious process of revaluing imperial history. Rhodes, a TV series on Cecil Rhodes, the South African statesman, was broadcast in 1996.

were reasonably prominent in silent films, but the Hays Code banished them and for many years one had to look to the French for such revelations as were to be found in Le Plaisir and Adua et sa Compagnie. In the 60s, however, the doors opened. Comic Victorian brothels were shown in The Assassination Bureau and The Best House in London, and a French version in Lady L. Ulysses showed the Dublin version. A House is not a Home told the 'true' story of Polly Adler. The brothel in The Balcony was symbolic, in House of a Thousand Dolls fantastic, in How Sweet It Is charming, in Games That Lovers Play whimsical, in The Last Detail grimly realistic. Walk on the Wild Side concentrated on the depressing aspects and even sported a lesbian madam. Pretty Baby had a young girl growing up in a brothel and being sold for the night to the highest bidder. Nowadays every western has one, notably Waterhole Three, Five Card Stud, Hang 'em High, McCabe and Mrs Miller, Dirty Dingus Magee, The Cheyenne Social Club, The Ballad of Cable Hogue, and Unforgiven; nor are police thrillers such as Badge 343 complete without them.

Bugs Bunny.

Warners' famous cartoon character, the wise-cracking Brooklynesque rabbit who maintained his aplomb in all situations. First appearance in A Wild Hare 40, although he evolved from a rabbit seen earlier in Porky's Hare Hunt 37; 'retired' 1963; reappeared in 70s as 'compère' of TV specials grouping his old cartoons. One of Bugs' creators claimed that the character was inspired by the sight of Clark Gable eating a carrot in It Happened One Night. Voiced by Mel Blanc. Catchphrase: 'What's up Doc?'

Biography: 1990, Bugs Bunny: Fifty Years and Only One Grey Hare by Joe Adamson.

AA 1958: Knightly Knight Bugs.

Bulldog Drummond.

'Sapper' (Herman Cyril McNeile) created this famous character, an amateur James Bond of the 20s with old-fashioned manners and an army background, based on his friend Gerard Fairlie. First portrayed on screen by Carlyle Blackwell in 1922; later by Jack Buchanan (1925 and 1940), Ronald Colman (1928 and 1934), Kenneth McKenna(1930), Ralph Richardson (1934), Atholl Fleming in Jack Hulbert's Bulldog Jack (1935), John Lodge (1937), Ray Milland (1937), John Howard, in eight films (1937-39), Ron Randell, in two films (1947), Tom Conway, in two films (1948), Walter Pidgeon in Calling Bulldog Drummond (1951) and Richard Johnson in Deadlier than the Male (1966) and Some Girls Do (1968).

have understandably not been a popular ingredient of English-speaking films, apart from the romanticism of the two versions of Blood and Sand and the cynicism of The Last Flight 31 and The Sun Also Rises. Several Continental films, including The Moment of Truth, have tried to convey the mystique of bullfighting, but it has more often been seen as a background for suspense films (The Caper of the Golden Bulls) and comedy (The Kid from Spain, Laurel and Hardy in The Bullfighters and Tommy the Toreador, Abbott and Costello in Mexican Hayride, Peter Sellers in The Bobo, etc.). The three more recent American attempts to make a serious drama on the subject (The Bullfighter and the Lady, The Brave Bulls and The Magnificent Matador) were notably unpopular, while Arruza by Budd Boetticher (himself an ex-bullfighter) was never properly finished.

burlesque.

A word of Italian origin which came to mean an acted 'spoof' of a serious subject. In America it was applied to what the British would call music hall or variety, and eventually connoted striptease and low comedians. It died out as an institution in the 30s: Rouben Mamoulian's Applause 29 gives a vivid picture of its latter days. George Watters and Arthur Hopkins' play Burlesque, popular in the 20s, concerns a comedian who leaves his long-suffering wife for other women and the demon rum. It was filmed three times, most recently as When My Baby Smiles at Me 48, with Betty Grable and Dan Dailey. The heyday of burlesque was also evoked in The Night They Raided Minsky's 68, in Lady of Burlesque and in Gypsy.

have often provided a dramatic background for film plots. In Speed, Sandra Bullock had to drive a booby-trapped bus at more than 50 mph to prevent the vehicle exploding. Man-Made Monster and The October Man began with bus accidents, and one of the stories in Dead of Night ended with one. Strangers met on a bus in Friday the Thirteenth, It Happened One Night, San Diego I Love You (in which Buster Keaton defied regulations by driving his bus along the seashore), Bus Stop and The Wayward Bus. Parting at the bus station was featured in Orchestra Wives, Dark Passage, Two Tickets to Broadway, and Rattle of a Simple Man; romances were conducted on a bus in Violent Playground and Underground; a trap was set for a criminal in a bus station in Down Three Dark Streets. Passengers on buses broke into song in Keep Your Seats Please, Ride 'Em Cowboy and Summer Holiday. As for comedy effects using buses, there was the little boy whose head stuck in the bus wheel in Monsieur Hulot's Holiday, Will Hay driving a bus round a race-track in Ask a Policeman, Bob Hope wrecking an Irish bus outing in My Favourite Blonde, Frankie Howerd losing his way in the fog in The Runaway Bus, Richard Burton escorting his matrons on a bus tour in The Night of the Iguana, and Laurel and Hardy driving a bus on to a roller coaster in The Dancing Masters ... among others. The only comedies about bus crews were the spinoffs from the British TV series On the Buses. The Big Bus was a spoof on disaster movies. Speed 94 made a runaway bus big box-office.

Hollywood has always been fascinated by butlers, especially those who give an impression of British imperturbability. Actors notably benefiting from this penchant include Arthur Treacher (who played Jeeves on film in the 30s), Robert Greig, Charles Coleman, Aubrey Mather, Melville Cooper, Halliwell Hobbes, Barnett Parker, Alan Mowbray and Eric Blore (whose butlers usually had a kind of suppressed malevolence). The catch-phrase 'the butler did it' was, however, seldom true of murder mysteries, though Bela Lugosi played some very sinister servants in the 40s, Richard Haydn was guilty of at least one murder in And Then There Were None; the butler in The Hound of the Baskervilles certainly had something to hide. Another villainous 'man's man' was Philip Latham in Dracula Prince of Darkness: he lured the count's victims.

Tragic butlers are limited to Anthony Hopkins in The Remains of the Day. Comedy butlers are led by Charles Laughton as Ruggles of Red Gap and by Edward Brophy, who often played an American imitation of the real thing, John Gielgud in Arthur and its sequel, Richard Hearne in The Butler's Dilemma, Edward Rigby in Don't Take It to Heart, and Laurel and Hardy who in A Chump at Oxford took literally an instruction to 'serve the salad undressed'. Jack Buchanan pretended to be his own butler in Lord Richard in the Pantry, and William Powell and David Niven, who both played My Man Godfrey, had their own reasons for going into service. Other butlers with something to hide were found in White Tie and Tails and The Baroness and the Butler, and in Spring in Park Lane Michael Wilding was a mysterious footman. In The Fallen Idol Ralph Richardson's butler was almost arrested for a murder he didn't commit. Michael Gough and Michael Caine have both been butlers to Batman's alter ego, Bruce Wayne. Perhaps television has given us the two best-known butlers: P.G. Wodehouse's Jeeves (as played in series by Dennis Price and Stephen Fry) and Gordon Jackson as Hudson in Upstairs Downstairs.

cable cars

have added excitement to the climax of many a film adventure, notably Night Train to Munich, The Trollenberg Terror, Edge of Eternity, Second Chance, Where Eagles Dare, Hannibal Brooks and The Double Man. In 1979 Irwin Allen made a four-hour TV suspenser, Hanging by a Thread, entirely about a cable car accident; but it failed to thrill.

cannibalism

has been featured in such documentaries as The Sky Above, The Mud Below, but it is rare in fiction films, although it is becoming much more common. Apart from the Swedish short Midvinterblot, the main examples are from the 70s: Welcome to Arrow Beach and Survive!, a low-budget film based on the true story of the cannibalistic survivors of a South American plane crash. It was remade in 92 as Alive! The films Manhunter 86, The Silence of The Lambs 91 and Hannibal 01 made a popular bogeyman of Dr Hannibal Lecter, a serial killer who feasted on his victims. Cannibalism also featured in the climax of Peter Greenaway's art-house hit The Cook, the Thief, His Wife and Her Lover 89. From the 60s onwards, eaters of human flesh had become a familiar ingredient of horror movies, notably in the cult success Texas Chainsaw Massacre 74 and its sequels. But it also found its way into more mainstream films, including The 'burbs, Parents and Claire Denis's Trouble Every Day 01, about government experiments turning people into sexually-obsessed flesh-eaters, showing that no taboo is proof against the predations of producers.

Carl Hamilton

is a Swedish secret agent, the hero of a sequence of novels by Jan Guillou. So far, six have been filmed, starring in the role Peter Haber and Stefan Sauk; Stellan Skarsgard in two films, Töcknam Coq Rouge 89 and Den Demokratiske Terroristen 92; and Peter Stormare in Hamilton 98, a film based on two of the books.

Carmen.

Prosper Mérimée's high-romantic tale of a fatal gypsy whose worthless attractions wreck men's lives was promptly turned by Bizet into an opera which has been filmed many times, notably as Carmen Jones 54 and by Carlos Saura as a flamenco dance drama Carmen 83. The straight dramatic story, however, probably holds the record for the number of film versions it has spawned:

France	1909	with Victoria Lepanto
Spain	1910	actress unknown
US	1913	Marguerite Snow
US	1913	Marion Leonard
Spain	1914	actress unknown
US	1915	Geraldine Farrar
US	1915	Edna Purviance (Burlesque on Carmen)
US	1916	Theda Bara

Carry On films.

This long-running series that became as much a British institution as fish and chips began with an army farce, Carry On Sergeant, scripted by Norman Hudis from an unpublished play by R. F. Delderfield, and directed by Gerald Thomas. Among the cast were Kenneth Williams, Charles Hawtrey and Kenneth Connor, who were to become Carry On regulars. Over the years the plots gradually disappeared under an accumulation of old jokes which grew steadily bluer, especially when, after the first six, Talbot Rothwell replaced Hudis as the writer; after his death the last four were written by various hands but failed to recapture the flavour of the earlier movies. An amalgam of music-hall humour and end-of-pier farces, the films' makeshift construction was evident even with the later use of colour, and they never raised their sights as high as satire. All were directed by Thomas and produced by Peter Rogers on as low a budget as possible. A Sussex beach stood in for the Sahara in Carry On, Follow That Camel and a Welsh mountainside for the Khyber Pass. Apart from Williams, Hawtrey and Connor, the regulars included Sid James, Bernard Bresslaw, Jim Dale, Joan Sims, Barbara Windsor, Hattie Jacques, Terry Scott, Patsy Rowlands, Jack Douglas and Peter Butterworth, with occasional guests such as Harry H. Corbett, Fenella Fielding, Juliet Mills and even Phil Silvers. The music for the first four was written by Bruce Montgomery and for the remainder, apart from the final film, by Eric Rogers.

The sequence was: Carry On Sergeant 58; Carry On Nurse (a surprising hit in the US) 59; Carry On Teacher 59; Carry On Constable 60; Carry On Regardless 60; Carry On Cruising (the first in colour) 62; Carry On Cabby (bw) 63; Carry On Jack (colour, the first by Talbot Rothwell) 64; Carry On Spying (bw) 64; Carry On Cleo (colour, as were all subsquent films) 64; Carry On Cowboy 65; Carry On Screaming 66; Carry On – Don't Lose Your Head 66; Carry On – Follow That Camel 66; Carry On Doctor 68; Carry On up the Khyber 68; Carry On Again Doctor 69; Carry On Camping 69; Carry On up the Jungle 70; Carry On Loving 70; Carry On Henry 71; Carry On at Your Convenience 71; Carry On Abroad 72; Carry On Matron 72; Carry On Girls 73; Carry On Dick (Rothwell's last) 74; Carry On Behind (scripted by Dave Freeman) 75; Carry On England (scripted by Jack Seddon and David Pursall) 76; Carry On Emmannuelle (scripted by Lance Peters) 78; Carry On Columbus (scripted by Dave Freeman) 92.

“I am convinced that audiences do not like change; they like the same thing over and over again. – Peter Rogers

They were all alike, weren't they? We made 31 films out of one gag. – Peter Rogers

This is v. odd, the way that Carry Ons are just starting to get mentioned: why are they suddenly fashionable? They're even trying to justify the bad scripts now! and talk about the classlessness of them. What hogwash! You can only call a mess a mess. – Kenneth Williams, 1964

The film was Carry On Abroad and I was featured doing all the old crap. Looking at this rubbish you realise that nothing has changed! British sit-coms all consist of the same routines, jokes, and dirt. Very depressing. – Kenneth Williams, 1988

If I had to think of one reason why the Carry Ons matter so much, it's because they really aren't recuperable for proper culture. Like the Crazy Gang, like George Formby, like Frank Randle, they display a commitment to bodily functions and base desires that will always render them irreducibly vulgar, inescapably Not Art. – Andy Medhurst, Sight and Sound, 1992

case histories

from medical files, which would once have been considered pretty dull plot material, have recently been presented quite starkly to paying audiences who appear to have relished them. In the 40s, Lady in the Dark was a richly decorated trifle, and even The Snake Pit and Mandy had subsidiary love interest, but in more recent years we have had such unvarnished studies as Girl, Interrupted (wrongfully institutionalized), El (paranoiac jealousy), Pressure Point (fascist tendencies), A Child is Waiting (mentally handicapped children), Life Upside Down (withdrawal), The Collector (sex fantasies), Repulsion, In Cold Blood, 10 Rillington Place and The Boston Strangler (homicidal mania), Bigger Than Life and Permanent Midnight (drugs). The Three Faces of Eve and Lizzie (split personality), Marnie (frigidity), Morgan (infantile regression), and Family Life. At least the pretence of studying a case history relieves writers of the responsibility of providing a dramatic ending. Casper, the Friendly Ghost.

The happy baby ghost created by producer Joseph Oriolo and animator Seymour Wright in 1945 was popular through the 50s and as a star of children's television in the 60s. A live action feature starring Christina Ricci and Eric Idle was released in 1995. It was followed by Casper, a new animated TV series that ran from 1996-98.

The Friendly Ghost 45. There's Good Boos Tonight 48. A-Haunting We Will Go 49. Casper Comes to Clown 51. Deep Boo Sea 52. Frightday the 13th 53. Zero the Hero 54. Casper Genie 54. Hide and Shriek 55. catchphrases

Although Garbo got into the act with 'I want to be alone' and Boyer impersonators have had a ball with a line Boyer never spoke, 'Come with me to the Casbah', it is comedians who devise and need readily identifiable catchphrases, so that audiences have something to laugh at without even being warmed up. Here are a few which should be immediately recognized:

“Diminutive Arthur Askey came up with I thank you (pronounced Ay Theng Yow) and was annoyed when Cyril Fletcher used the slight variation Thanking you...
as well as:
Dreaming oh my darling love of thee.
Sandy Powell had
Can you hear me, mother?
George Formby contracted this, in moments of stress, to Ohh, muvver!
when he wasn't telling everyone that it had Turned out nice again!
Flanagan and Allen's most notable trade mark was simply Oi!
while Will Hay perfected a sniff, Max Miller however told his audiences:
There'll never be another!
and when they laughed at his floral suit, asked:
Well, what if I am?
When Old Mother Riley needed help, she screamed:
Mrs Ginocchi, SOS!
and of her errant daughter she inevitably demanded:
Where've you been, who've you been with, what've you been doing, and why?
Robb Wilton reminisced about
The day war broke out and Tommy Trinder called his audience
You lucky people!
Bruce Forsyth also gets on chummily with his audience, asking for applause with Didn't he do well?
Jack Warner was worried for his property:
Mind my bike...
and Robertson Hare always anticipated disaster:

Oh, calamity!

Schoolmasterish Jimmy Edwards told his audience to Wake up at the back there!

While Ben Lyon was constantly afraid that his mother-in-law in the audience might take umbrage at any insulting lines from the stage:

Not you, momma, sit down!

The famous radio series It's That Man Again practically consisted of catchphrases, including

Can I do you now, sir?
Don't forget the diver...
After you, Claude ... no, after you, Cecil...
I go, I come back.
Good morning, nice day.
I don't mind if I do.
Boss, boss, sumpn terrible's happened...
This is Funf speaking...

After ITMA's demise, other radio shows caught on to the idea, Arthur Askey producing Hello, playmates!

Before your very eyes.
Don't be filthy.

and

These jokes are free for pantomime!

Sam Costa was recognized by:

Good morning, sir, was there something?

While Take It from Here also added its share of phrases to the language:

Gently, Bentley.
A mauve one.
Clumsy clot.
Oh, Eth ... oh, Ron...

Frankie Howerd wished his audiences:

And the best of luck!

Max Bygraves has asserted himself:

I've arrived, and to prove it, I'm here.

Tough heroes have been getting in on the act. Clint Eastwood's has become a cliché that has even found its way on to T-shirts. And there's Arnold 'The Terminator' Schwarzenegger with:

Make my day

I'll be back.

Cenobites.

Demons from hell that feature in the work of author Clive Barker and which have appeared in three films: Hellraiser; Hellbound: Hellraiser II; Hellraiser III. The best known is Pinhead, so called because the contours of his face are marked out by pins stuck in his flesh.

Charley's Aunt.

There have been at least ten film versions, of various nationalities, of the farce by English actor and playwright Walter Brandon Thomas (1856-1914), which has been rarely absent from the stage since its first production in 1892, when it ran for four years. Its comedy stems from undergraduate Lord Fancourt Babberley having to impersonate his friend's aunt from Brazil, 'where the nuts come from'. It was made as a silent in 1925, starring Sydney Chaplin. Other notable versions came in 1930, with Charles Ruggles; in 1940, with Arthur Askey in Charley's Big Hearted Aunt; in 1941, with Jack Benny in what was known in Britain as Charley's American Aunt; in 1952, when Ray Bolger repeated his Broadway success in Where's Charley?, a musical version by George Abbott and Frank Loesser.

❝ It's pleasing to think that probably the two most famous plays throughout the entire world are Hamlet and Charley's Aunt. – John Chapman

Charlie and the Chocolate Factory

Roald Dahl's story of a little boy who is one of five to win a ticket to visit a confectionary factory was first filmed as Willie Wonka and the Chocolate Factory in 1971 as an imaginative, upbeat musical, directed by Mel Stuart and starring Gene Wilder as the reclusive and eccentric chocolate maker. Tim Burton's remake in 2005 was a darker film, closer in spirit to the often gruesome original, with spectacular and inventive production design, and starring Johnny Depp as a deeply disturbed Willie Wonka.

Charlie Chan.

Earl Derr Biggers' polite oriental detective with the large family and an even more plentiful supply of wise and witty sayings was first featured by Hollywood in a 1926 serial; George Kuwa played him.

Kamiyama Sojin played him once in 1928, E. L. Park once in 1929, Warner Oland sixteen times (1931-37), Sidney Toler twenty-two times (1938-47) and Roland Winters six times (1948-52). J. Carrol Naish then took over for thirty-nine TV films (1957), and in 1971 Ross Martin appeared as Chan in a TV feature. 1972 brought an animated TV cartoon series, Charlie Chan and the Chan Clan: Chan was voiced by Keye Luke, who had played Chan's number two son so often in the 30s. A veil is best drawn over the so-called spoof of 1981's Charlie Chan and the Curse of the Dragon Queen, in which Peter Ustinov took over the role of the famous detective.

The 'classic' Chan films were as follows:

1929	Behind That Curtain
1931	Charlie Chan Carries On, The Black Camel
1932	Charlie Chan's Chance, Charlie Chan's Greatest Case
1934	Charlie Chan's Courage, Charlie Chan in London
1935	Charlie Chan in Paris, Charlie Chan in Egypt, Charlie Chan in Shanghai
1936	Charlie Chan's Secret, Charlie Chan at the Circus, Charlie Chan at the Racetrack, Charlie Chan at the Opera
1937	Charlie Chan at the Olympics, Charlie Chan on Broadway
1938	Charlie Chan at Monte Carlo (last Oland), Charlie Chan in Honolulu
1939	Charlie Chan in Reno, Charlie Chan at Treasure Island, Charlie Chan in the City of Darkness
1940	Charlie Chan in Panama, Charlie Chan's Murder Cruise, Charlie Chan in the Wax Museum, Murder over New York
1941	Dead Men Tell, Charlie Chan in Rio
1942	Castle in the Desert (after which the series moved from Fox to Monogram and consequently lower budgets) were two imperturbable, cricket-loving Englishmen played by Basil Radford and Naunton Wayne respectively in Hitchcock's The Lady Vanishes 38, which was written by Frank Launder and Sidney Gilliat. They turned up again in the same writers' thriller Night Train to Munich 40, directed by Carol Reed, and were heard in BBC radio serials. One such, Crook's Tour 40, was turned into a low-budget film by John Baxter, with a script by John Watt and Max Kester. Launder and Gilliat wrote and directed the wartime Millions Like Us 43, in which Charters and Caldicott appeared in uniform. A remake of The Lady Vanishes 79 had the duo played by Arthur Lowe and Ian Carmichael, and they also featured in a short-lived TV series, Charters and Caldicott 85, featuring Robin Bailey and Michael Aldridge.

Charters and Caldicott

has always been a standard ingredient of film-making, providing a foolproof way of rounding off a comedy or thriller in good style. In silent days it was necessary to every comedian, from the Keystone Kops to Buster Keaton, while westerns inevitably concluded with the goodies chasing the baddies, and even Intolerance has a four-stranded chase finale. Sound comedies began by using the chase more sparingly, but René Clair's Le Million 32 was a superbly sustained example of the fuller orchestration now possible, and later sophisticated comedies like It Happened One Night, Sullivan's Travels, The Runaround, Sex and the Single Girl, Good Neighbour Sam, What's Up Doc? and O Brother, Where Art Thou? have not disdained using the chase as a basic theme; nor of course have broader comedians such as Harold Lloyd, W.C. Fields, Laurel and Hardy and Abbott and Costello, and Stanley Kramer devised a super chase in the marathon It's a Mad Mad Mad Mad World 63, to be rivalled in 1965 by The Great Race. Most of the old chase gags were crammed into the finale of A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum 67. Ealing comedies of the late 40s and early 50s (The Lavender Hill Mob, Whisky Galore, The Man in the White Suit, A Run For Your Money) also used chases brilliantly to broaden their shafts of satire.

More serious films using the chase theme include: You Only Live Once, Stagecoach, Out of the Past, High Sierra, They Live By Night, Odd Man Out, The Capture, The Chase, Tell Them Willie Boy Is Here, Figures in a Landscape, and the innumerable versions of Les Misérables, which also sparked off five television series: The Fugitive, Run For Your Life, Branded, Run Buddy Run, and Kung Fu. Thrillers which have featured exciting chases include the Bond adventures, many Hitchcocks including The 39 Steps and North by Northwest, The Naked City, Robbery, Bullitt, Vanishing Point, The French Connection, Puppet on a Chain, Dirty Mary Crazy Larry, Race with the Devil, Escape from Zahrain and The Seven-Ups.

have been popular with every generation of filmgoers. Throughout the 20s Mary Pickford stayed at the top by remaining a child as long as, and after, she could; with only slight competition from Baby Peggy, Madge Evans, Dawn O'Day (later Anne Shirley) and Wesley Barry. Stronger competitors, perhaps, were Junior Coghlan and, around 1930, Junior Durkin; strongest of all was Jackie Coogan, immortalized by Chaplin as The Kid in 1920 and subsequently cast in all the standard juvenile roles. The child comedians who composed Our Gang for Hal Roach started in the 20s and went on, with cast changes, into the 40s: best remembered of them are Joe Cobb, Jean Darling, Johnny Downs, Mickey Daniels, Farina, Spanky McFarland, Alfalfa Switzer, Darla Hood and Buckwheat Thomas.

Jackie Cooper also started in Our Gang but became a star in his own right after playing in The Champ and Skippy. In the early 30s his main rival was Dickie Moore, a lad of somewhat gentler disposition. Soon both were displaced in popular favour by Freddie Bartholemew in David Copperfield; but no boy could hold a candle to the multi-talented prodigy Shirley Temple, a star in 1933 at the age of five. She captivated a generation in a dozen or more hurriedly-produced sentimental comedies, and neither the angelic British Binkie Stuart nor the mischievous Jane Withers could cast the same spell.

Noting a splendid performance by twelve-year-old Robert Lynen in the French Poil de Carotte, we next encounter the still irrepressible Mickey Rooney, who popped up variously as Puck, Andy Hardy or a one-man-band. Then in 1937, the year that the Mauch twins appeared in The Prince and the Pauper, an MGM short called Every Sunday introduced two singing teenage girls, Deanna Durbin and Judy Garland, who went on to achieve enormous popularity in maturing roles until both were overtaken by personal difficulties. Another child who went on to musical stardom was vaudeville-bred Donald O'Connor, first seen in Sing You Sinners. But little more was seen of Tommy Kelly, who played Tom Sawyer, or Ann Gillis, or Terry Kilburn, or even Roddy McDowall until he re-emerged as a character actor twenty-five years later.

The early 40s saw Edith Fellows as a good girl and Virginia Weidler, so marvellous in The Philadelphia Story, as a bad one. Baby Sandy appeared in a few comedies, as had Baby Le Roy ten years earlier; neither was seen on screen after the toddler stage. Two infant Dead End Kids, Butch and Buddy, roamed mischievously through several Universal comedies. Margaret O'Brien and Peggy Ann Garner were two truly remarkable child actresses who never quite managed the transition to adult stardom. Teenagers Ann Blyth and Peggy Ryan partnered Donald O'Connor in many a light musical. Other child actors of the period were Ted Donaldson, Diana Lynn, Darryl Hickman and Sharyn Moffett, while Skippy Homeier gave an electrifying performance as the young Nazi in Tomorrow the World. In the post-war years Europe contributed Ivan Jandl in The Search; Britain had George Cole and Harry Fowler for cockney roles, Jeremy Spenser for well-bred ones, Anthony Wager and Jean Simmons in Great Expectations, and very memorable performances from Bobby Henrey in The Fallen Idol and John Howard Davies in Oliver Twist. Hollywood responded with thoughtful Claude Jarman, tearful Bobs Watson, spunky Bobby Driscoll and Tommy Rettig, and pretty little misses Gigi Perreau and Natalie Wood.

The 50s brought William (now James) Fox in The Magnet, Brigitte Fossey and Georges Poujouly in Les Jeux Interdits, Mandy Miller in Mandy, Vincent Winter and Jon Whiteley in The Kidnappers, Brandon de Wilde in Shane, and Patty McCormack as the evil child in The Bad Seed. In 1959 Hayley Mills embarked on a six-year reign (somewhat outshone in Whistle down the Wind by Alan Barnes); the similar and equally capable American actress Patty Duke confined herself principally to stage and TV apart from The Miracle Worker. Then there have been Disney's over-wholesome Tommy Kirk and Annette Funicello, Fergus McClelland in Sammy Going South, Jean-Pierre Léaud in The Four Hundred Blows, William Dix in The Nanny, Matthew Garber and Karen Dotrice in Mary Poppins, Deborah Baxter in A High Wind in Jamaica, Mark Lester and Jack Wild in Oliver, Tatum O'Neal in Paper Moon, Linda Blair in The Exorcist, Ando in Paper Tiger, Kim Richards and Ike Eisenmann in Escape to Witch Mountain, Ricky Schroder in The Champ.

Bonnie Bedelia's nephew Macaulay Culkin starred in the most successful of all comedies, Home Alone, which was his fourth film, and commanded a fee of $5 million for the sequel. Lukas Haas, who played the wide-eyed seven-year-old boy in Witness, has gone on to make more films, as has Elijah Wood. More recently, the grave Haley Joel Osment was nominated for an Oscar for his performance in The Sixth Sense, and Jamie Bell set hearts dancing in his role as the ballet-loving miner's son in Billy Elliot. Freddie Highmore won praise for his performances in Finding Neverland and Charlie and the Chocolate Factory, as did Dakota Fanning for her roles in I Am Sam, Man of Fire and War of the Worlds, while the Harry Potter films have provided fame and fortune for teenagers Daniel Radcliffe, Rupert Grint and Emma Watson.

Whether they will be able, or even want, to continue their careers into adulthood is another matter. Perhaps it is significant that Jodie Foster, one of the few to have made the successful transition from child star to adult actress, chose to make her début as a director in 91 with Little Man Tate, a film about the problems of gifted children.

❝ Being a child actor is not something I'd allow my child to choose. Why? Because I'm in the business. I know you have to become an adult far too quickly. You're working. You're not being a kid. It's a giant responsibility. But there are all kinds of child actors out there, and if we didn't have them we'd have to hire a lot of midgets. – Craig Baumgarten childhood portrayed by grown-ups was instanced by Joan Fontaine in Letter from an Unknown Woman; by Ginger Rogers in The Major and the Minor; by Ginger Rogers and Alan Marshal in Tom Dick and Harry; by Ginger Rogers and Cary Grant in Monkey Business; by Jack Buchanan, Fred Astaire and Nanette Fabray in the 'Triplets' number in Band Wagon and Tom Hanks in Big. One might also add Judy Garland in The Wizard of Oz: she was seventeen when she played Dorothy.

Chilly Willy.

Cheerful, quick-witted penguin who starred in 35 cartoons from 1953-72, produced by Walter Lanz and released by Universal. He enjoyed his greatest success when animated briefly by Tex Avery.

Chilly Willy 53. I'm Cold (AAN) 54. Hot and Cold 55. The Big Snooze 57. Polar Pests 58. Clash and Carry 61. Fish and Chips 63. Snow Place Like Home 66. Hot Time on Ice 67. Chilly's Cold War 70. The Rude Intruder 72, etc.

Christ

on the screen was for many years a controversial subject: film-makers have usually preferred to imply his presence by a hand, a cloak, or simply reactions of onlookers. However, even in the first ten years of cinephotography there were several versions of his life, and in 1912 Robert Henderson played the role in a 'super' production of From the Manger to the Cross. In 1916 came Civilisation, with George Fisher as Christ on the battlefields, and in the same year Intolerance, in which Howard Gaye was Jesus. In 1927 Cecil B. de Mille's King of Kings had H.B. Warner in the role; any offence was minimized by having his first appearance a misty fade-in as the blind girl regains her sight. In 1932 Duvivier made Golgotha, with Robert le Vigan; twenty years then went by before Christ's next appearance on the screen, played by a non-professional, Robert Wilson, in a sponsored movie called Day of Triumph. In 1961 Jeffrey Hunter appeared as Christ in King of Kings, which was unfortunately tagged by the trade I Was a Teenage Jesus. George Stevens' disappointing 1965 colossus, The Greatest Story Ever Told, cleverly cast Swedish Max von Sydow in the part; in the same year came Pasolini's The Gospel According to St Matthew, with Enrique Irazoqui; and in 1969 Buñuel cast Bernard Verley as Christ in The Milky Way. Christ-like figures of various kinds have been found in such films as The Passing of the Third Floor Back, The Fugitive, Strange Cargo and The Face; while films about the direct influence of Christ's life include Quo Vadis, The Last Days of Pompeii, Ben Hur, Barabbas, The Wandering Jew and The Robe, in which the voice of Christ was provided by Cameron Mitchell. The most recent Christs have been in the modernized pop-operas Godspell and Jesus Christ Superstar; a TV series, Jesus of Nazareth; a TV movie with a literal slant, The Day Christ Died; and Martin Scorsese's The Last Temptation of Christ. Alessandro D'Alatri's The Garden of Eden 98 covered the childhood and adolescence of Jesus, who was played by Kim Rossi Stuart. Mel Gibson's brutal The Passion of The Christ 04 depicted the final tortured hours of Jesus' life and became one of the profitable films made, taking more than $370m at the US box-office.

Christmas

has provided a favourite sentimental climax for many a film. Films wholly based on it include The Holly and the Ivy, Tenth Avenue Angel, Miracle on 34th Street, White Christmas, Christmas Eve, Christmas in Connecticut, The Bishop's Wife, I'll Be Seeing You, and the many versions of Scrooge. There were happy Christmas scenes in The Bells of St Mary, The Inn of the Sixth Happiness, The Man Who Came to Dinner, Holiday Inn, Since You Went Away, Three Godfathers, It's a Wonderful Life, Young at Heart, Meet Me in St Louis, On Moonlight Bay, Little Women, The Cheaters, Desk Set and Young at Heart among others; while unhappy Christmases were spent in Things to Come, Full House ('The Gifts of the Magi'), The Apartment, Meet John Doe, The Glenn Miller Story, The Christmas Tree, Christmas Holiday, and The Victors. (Nor was there much for the characters in The Lion in Winter to celebrate at the Christmas court of 1189.)

Santa Claus himself put in an appearance in Miracle on 34th Street (played by Edmund Gwenn and, in the remake, Richard Attenborough), The Lemon Drop Kid (played by Bob Hope), The Light at Heart (played by Monty Woolley), Robin and the Seven Hoods (played by the Sinatra clan) and The Chronicles of Narnia: The Lion, the Witch and the Wardrobe (played by James Cosmo). Disney features him in Babes in Toyland and a short cartoon, The Night Before Christmas; and in their 1934 version of Babes in Toyland Laurel and Hardy found him an irate employer. Tim Allen substituted for him in The Santa Clause and The Santa Clause 2.

Christmas was celebrated in unlikely settings in Knights of the Round Table, Conquest of Space, Scott of the Antarctic, Encore ('Winter Cruise'), Destination Tokyo (in a submarine), The Nun's Story (in a Congo Mission), Black Narcissus (in an Indian nunnery) and Merry Christmas/Joyeux Noel (with a football match involving the Germans, French and British on a battlefield during World War I).

have provided a setting for many pretty secular-minded films, from the various versions of The Hunchback of Notre Dame to the use of a church as a refuge during a flood in When Tomorrow Comes. Other memorable moments include Bogart confessing the plot of Dead Reckoning to a priest; Robert Donat's sermon in Lease of Life and Orson Welles' in Moby Dick; the scandalous confessions in Les Jeux Interdits and the dramatic one in I Confess; the murder of Becket; the bombed but well-used churches in Mrs Miniver and Sundown; the thing in the rafters of Westminster Abbey in The Quatermass Experiment; the attempted murder in Westminster Cathedral in Foreign Correspondent and the fall from the church tower in Vertigo; the spies in the mission chapel in The Man Who Knew Too Much; the arrest of Pastor Hall; Arturo de Cordova going mad during a service in El; the church-tower climax of The Stranger; the Russian services in Ivan the Terrible and We Live Again; Cagney dying on the church steps in The Roaring Twenties; the church used as refuge against the Martians in The War of the Worlds; the church used for a town meeting in High Noon; the Turkish mosque and espionage rendezvous in From Russia with Love; the comic rifling of offertory boxes in Heaven Sent; the finale of Miracle in the Rain in the church porch; the meeting in church of the protagonists of The Appaloosa; the characters finally trapped in a church in The Exterminating Angel; the churches swept away by the elements in The Hurricane and Hawaii; the church rendezvous in Alice's Restaurant; the church with the moving statue in The Miracle of the Bells; and all the many films in which the protagonists are PRIESTS, MONKS and NUNS.

the cinema

A few fragments of thought:

The cinema, like the detective story, makes it possible to experience without danger all the excitement, passion and desirousness which must be suppressed in a humanitarian ordering of society. -C.G. Jung

It has no boundary ... it is a ribbon of dream. -Orson Welles

The most collaborative of the arts. -Dore Schary

Truth twenty-four times a second. -Jean-Luc Godard

Of all the arts, the cinema is the most important for us. -V.I. Lenin

That temple of sex, with its goddesses, its guardians and its victims... -Jean Cocteau

An uncomfortable way of watching television. -Sheila Black

The film is not an art but a super tabloid for young and old, moron and genius. Her sister muses are the comic strips, the pulp magazines, the radio and all other forms of entertainment based on democratic rather than aesthetic principles. -Howard Collins (manager in 1953 of Roxy Theatre, NY)

Of course a film should have a beginning, a middle and an end. But not necessarily in that order. -Jean-Luc Godard

I always think that watching films is very like dreaming. -John Boorman

Whoever it was who first thought the cinema was an art, he should have kept his mouth shut. Not that it isn't, but there are so many terrible instances of films made specifically to be art which come perilously close to making us doubt the whole proposition. -John Russell Taylor

The film does best when it concentrates on a single character. It does The Informer superbly. It tends to lose itself in the ramifications of War and Peace. -Budd Schulberg

The finished product is not finished when the actor is. The work is completed by a pair of shears. -Josef von Sternberg

Editing is the foundation of the film art. -Pudovkin

Get a director and a writer and leave them alone. That's how the best pictures get made. -William Wellman

Any attempt in America to make a film a work of art must be hailed. Usually, in the same breath, it must be farewelled. -John Simon

The American film mind, though it can deal competently enough with the stupendous, cannot help vulgarizing any scene which approaches the intimate. -James Agate

Collectively the audience is, in the matter of aesthetic, totally uneducated. They gape before the screen today as the thirteenth-century play-goer gaped at the morality play. -James Agate again, in 1921

Most Hollywood comedies are so vulgar, witless and dull that it is preposterous to write about them in any publication not meant to be read while chewing gum. -Wolcott Gibbs

Cinema is an improvement on life. -François Truffaut

If you want art, don't mess about with movies. Buy a Picasso. -Michael Winner

The movies languish as a fine art because the men who determine what is to get into them haven't the slightest visible notion that such a thing as a fine art exists. -H. L. Mencken, 1927

Film-making has now reached the same stage as sex – it's all technique and no feeling. -Penelope Gilliatt in the 80s

have only rarely provided a background for film situations. A Hollywood première and a sneak preview were shown in Singin' in the Rain, and The Oscar revealed all about the Academy Awards ceremony. Characters in Sherlock Junior, Borderlines and Merton of the Movies (Red Skelton version) clambered on to the stage while a film was showing. Projectionists were featured in Clash by Night, The Blob, The Great Morgan, and Hellzapoppin; also in The Smallest Show on Earth, the only film concerned with the running of a cinema as its main plot unless one counts The Last Picture Show in which the small-town cinema is an essential background to the character development. Fred Allen in It's in the Bag had a terrible time trying to find a seat in a full house; Dillinger was killed coming out of a cinema in The F.B.I. Story; Bogart was nearly shot in a Chinese cinema in Across the Pacific, and Anthony Perkins met Valli in a Siamese one in This Angry Age/The Sea Wall. A cinema was used as a rendezvous for spies in The Traitors and Sabotage; a church was used as a cinema in Sullivan's Travels when chain-gang convicts watched Mickey Mouse. Mark Stevens and Joan Fontaine in From This Day Forward visited a news cinema but were too much in love to heed the warnings of impending war. Louis Jourdan and Linda Christian watched Valentino at the local in The Happy Time, and astronauts watched Bob Hope in a space station in Conquest of Space. Deanna Durbin got a murder clue in a cinema in Lady on a Train; and in Bullets or Ballots Humphrey Bogart took Barton MacLane to see a documentary about his nefarious career. Ray Danton in The Rise and Fall of Legs Diamond excused himself during a performance to rob the shop next door. The monster in The Tingler escapes into a silent cinema. Linda Hayden in Baby Love was accosted in a cinema. Robert Cummings in Saboteur started a riot in Radio City Music Hall, on the stairs of which Danny Kaye sang in Up in Arms. Fredric March watched a Thomas Ince silent at the local nickelodeon in One Foot in Heaven. In Brief Encounter, Celia Johnson and Trevor Howard thought the organist was the best part of the programme. Polly Bergen in The Caretakers went crazy and climbed up in front of the screen. Bonnie and Clyde found time between robberies to see a Gold Diggers movie. In Eye Witness a cinema manager was killed during the Saturday night performance; and in Targets a killer was apprehended by Boris Karloff at a drive-in. A drive-in was used as a rendezvous in White Heat and a 42nd Street cinema was a homosexual rendezvous in Midnight Cowboy. Cinema Paradiso was a love-letter to a small-town cinema and its projectionist. Home movies figured most notably in Rebecca and Adam's Rib.

according to the cinema, are full of drama and passion behind the scenes. So you would think if you judged from Variety, Freaks, The Wagons Roll at Night, The Greatest Show on Earth, The Big Show, The Big Circus, Sawdust and Tinsel, Circus of Horrors, Tromba, Four Devils, The Three Maxims, Trapeze, Captive Wild Woman, Ring of Fear, Charlie Chan at the Circus, A Tiger Walks, Circus World, The Trojan Brothers, Circus of Fear, Berserk, The Dark Tower, He Who Gets Slapped, Flesh and Fantasy, Man on a Tightrope, Chad Hanna, Pagliacci, Far From the Madding Crowd, and Vampire Circus. But there is a lighter side, as evidenced by Doctor Dolittle, Yo Yo, Jumbo, High Wide and Handsome, Lady in the Dark, Life is a Circus, The Marx Brothers at the Circus, Three Rings Circus, Chaplin's The Circus, The Great Profile, You Can't Cheat an Honest Man, Road Show, Merry Andrew, and Toby Tyler.

TV series have included Circus Boy, Frontier Circus and The Greatest Show on Earth.

The Cisco Kid

was a Mexican outlaw of the 1890s, created by O. Henry in a short story, The Caballero's Way. The character died in his first, silent-screen appearance in 1914, and owed his later longevity to the early talkie In Old Arizona 29, in which he was played as a dashing rogue by Warner Baxter. The role made Baxter a star and earned him an Oscar, after he took over the part from an injured Raoul Walsh; he followed it with three lesser sequels. Cesar Romero played the role in seven 'B' features from 1939, and was followed by Duncan Renaldo, who appeared in eight films from 1945, and Gilbert Roland, who clocked up six appearances in the late 40s. Renaldo also starred in a popular TV series, The Cisco Kid 50-56, with Leo Carrillo as his sidekick, Pancho. A TV film, The Cisco Kid 94, starred Jimmy Smits, with Cheech Marin as Pancho.

on the screen seems to have caused a remarkable amount of suffering to Edward G. Robinson: he was haunted by the effects of a prophecy in Flesh and Fantasy, Nightmare and Night Has a Thousand Eyes. Other frightened men for similar reasons were Claude Rains in The Clairvoyant, Dick Powell in It Happened Tomorrow, George Macready in I Love a Mystery, Mervyn Johns in Dead of Night, and Michael Hordern in The Night My Number Came Up. Rosanna Arquette suffers more than most as a medium able to foretell the violent deaths of those around her in Black Rainbow 89.

coal mines

and the bravery of the men who work in them formed a theme which commanded the respect of cinema audiences for many years. Apart from Kameradschaft (the French-German border), Germinal (France), Black Fury (US), The Molly Maguires (US) , Matewan (US), Blind Shaft/Mang Jing (China), all the major films on this subject have been about Britain: The Proud Valley, The Stars Look Down, How Green Was My Valley, The Citadel, The Corn is Green, The Brave Don't Cry, Sons and Lovers, Women in Love.

the Cold War has occupied the cinema right from Churchill's Fulton speech in 1948. For three years diehard Nazis had been the international villains par excellence, but a change was required, and Russians have been fair game ever since, in films like The Iron Curtain, Diplomatic Courier, I Was a Communist for the FBI, I Married a Communist, The Big Lift, Red Snow, The Red Danube, Red Menace, Red Planet Mars, The Journey, From Russia With Love and innumerable pulp spy thrillers, as well as such classier productions as The Third Man, The Man Between and The Spy Who Came in from the Cold. Rather surprisingly none of these caused much escalation of tension between the nations, and cooler feelings have permitted comedies like One Two Three, Dr Strangelove and The Russians are Coming, The Russians are Coming; while such terrifying panic-button melodramas as Fail Safe and The Bedford Incident are probably our best guarantee that the dangers are realized on both sides.

in the accepted sense began in vaudeville, but, depending so much on the spoken word, could make little headway in films until the advent of the talkies. Then they all tried, and many (Amos 'n Andy, Gallagher and Shean, Olsen and Johnson) didn't quite make it, at least not immediately. Laurel and Hardy, who had been successful in silents by the use of mime, adapted their methods very little and remained popular; during the 30s they were really only challenged by Wheeler and Woolsey, whose style was more frenetic, and briefly by Burns and Allen. From 1940 the cross-talking Abbott and Costello reigned supreme, with an occasional challenge from Hope and Crosby and the splendid Hellzapoppin from Olsen and Johnson. Then came Martin and Lewis, who didn't appeal to everybody, Rowan and Martin, who in 1957 didn't appeal to anybody, and sporadic attempts to popularize such teams as Brown and Carney and Allen and Rossi. In Britain, comedy teams were popular even in poor films: the best of them were Jack Hulbert and Cicely Courtneidge, Tom Walls and Ralph Lynn, Lucan and MacShane ('Old Mother Riley'), Arthur Askey and Richard Murdoch, and the Crazy Gang, a bumper fun bundle composed of Flanagan and Allen, Naughton and Gold, and Nervo and Knox. One should also mention Basil Radford and Naunton Wayne, not cross-talkers but inimitable caricaturists of the Englishman abroad; and others, not strictly comedians, who raised a lot of laughs together: Edmund Lowe and Victor McLaglen, Slim Summerville and ZaSu Pitts, Joan Blondell and Glenda Farrell, George Sidney and Charlie Murray, Marie Dressler and Polly Moran, Wallace Beery and Raymond Hatton, James Cagney and Pat O'Brien, Jack Lemmon and Walter Matthau. Recent teams include Morecambe and Wise and Cannon and Ball.

See: 1970, Movie Comedy Teams by Leonard Maltin.

Of larger groups, among the most outstanding are Our Gang, the Keystone Kops, the Marx Brothers, the Three Stooges, the Ritz Brothers, Will Hay with Moore Marriott and Graham Moffat, the 'Carry On' team, the Beatles and the Monty Python team.

comic strips

in newspapers have always been avidly watched by film producers with an eye on the popular market. Among films and series so deriving are the following:

Gertie the Dinosaur (cartoon series) 19; The Gumps (two-reelers) 23-28; Bringing Up Father 16 (drawn), 20 (two-reeler), 28 (feature with J. Farrell MacDonald and Marie Dressler), 45 (series of 'Jiggs and Maggie' features with Joe Yule and Renée Riano); The Katzenjammer Kids (cartoon series) 17 and 38, Krazy Kat (various cartoons 16-38); Ella Cinders (with Colleen Moore) 22; Tillie the Toiler (with Marion Davies) 27; Skippy (with Jackie Cooper) 30; Little Orphan Annie 32 (with Mitzi Green) and 38 (with Ann Gillis); Joe Palooka 34 (with Stu Erwin) and 47-51 (with Joe Kirkwood); Blondie (with Penny Singleton) 38-48; Gasoline Alley (with James Lydon) 51; L'il Abner; Popeye; Jungle Jim 49-54; Prince Valiant 54; Up Front 51-53; Felix the Cat; Old Bill (GB) 40; Dick Barton (GB) in various personifications; Jane (GB) in an abysmal 1949 second feature; and, of course, Modesty Blaise 66, Batman 66, Barbarella 68, and Fritz the Cat 71.

Strip characters whose adventures were turned into Hollywood serials during the 30s and 40s include Tailspin Tommy, Mandrake the Magician, Don Winslow of the Navy, Jet Jackson Flying Commando, Flash Gordon, Batman, Buck Rogers in the 25th century, Brick Bradford ('in the centre of the earth'), Chandu, Superman, Dick Tracy (also in 40s features), The Lone Ranger and Red Ryder. The re-emergence of Superman and Batman as heroes of big-budget films from the late 70s led to a search for similar fantastic figures to appeal to a mass audience. The Shadow and The Phantom both made unsuccessful appearances in the 90s, together with such recent and ambivalent comic-book creations as Judge Dredd and Tank Girl, where the distinctions between good and evil are more blurred. With the successful marketing on video of Japanese ANIME, derived from their comic books, and Manga, featuring fantastic heroes, came an attempt to turn Crying Freeman, a Chinese hitman, into an action movie hero.

In the late 70s comic strip characters became popular TV action heroes, and until the balloon burst audiences were overwhelmed by the antics of The Incredible Hulk, Wonder Woman, Buck Rogers in the 25th Century, etc., following on the success of TV's own creations in this vein, The Six Million Dollar Man, Bionic Woman and The Man from Atlantis.

has always been treated by Hollywood as a menace. In the 30s one could laugh at it, in Ninotchka and He Stayed for Breakfast. Then in World War II there was a respite during which the virtues of the Russian peasantry were extolled in such films as Song of Russia and North Star. But with the Cold War, every international villain became a Commie instead of a Nazi, and our screens were suddenly full of dour dramas about the deadliness of 'red' infiltration: I Married a Communist, I Was a Communist for the FBI, The Red Menace, The Iron Curtain, Trial, My Son John, Walk East on Beacon, The Red Danube, Red Snow, Red Planet Mars, Blood Alley, Big Jim McLain, The Manchurian Candidate. In the early 60s a documentary compilation of red aggression was released under the title We'll Bury You. The British never seemed to take the peril seriously, though the agitator in The Angry Silence was clearly labelled red.

Famous line: 'Communism,' said the butler in Soak the Rich, 'is the growing pains of the young.'

compilation films

became commonplace on TV through such series as Twentieth Century, Men of Our Time and The Valiant Years, all using library material to evoke a pattern of the past. Thanks to the careful preservation of original documentary material, film-makers have been able, over the last thirty years or so, to give us such films on a wide variety of subjects and to develop an exciting extra dimension of film entertainment which also serves a historical need.

The first outstanding efforts in this direction were made by H. Bruce Woolfe in his 20s documentaries of World War I, mixing newsreel footage with reconstructed scenes. In 1940 Cavalcanti assembled his study of Mussolini, Yellow Caesar; and in 1942 Frank Capra, working for the US Signal Corps, gave a tremendous fillip to the art of the compilation film with his 'Why We Fight' series. Paul Rotha's World of Plenty 43 was a clever study of world food shortages using all kinds of film material including animated diagrams and acted sequences. In 1945 Carol Reed and Garson Kanin, in The True Glory, gave the story of D-Day to Berlin an unexpected poetry, and in 1946 Don Siegel in his short Hitler Lives showed all too clearly what a frightening potential the compilation form had as propaganda. Nicole Védrès in 1947 turned to the more distant past and in Paris 1900 produced an affectionate portrait of a bygone age; Peter Baylis followed this with The Peaceful Years, covering the period between the two wars. In 1950 Stuart Legg's Powered Flight traced the history of aviation.

The Thorndikes, working in East Germany, started in 1956 their powerful series The Archives Testify, attributing war crimes to West German officials; this aggressive mood was followed in their Du und Mancher Kamerad ('The German Story') and The Russian Miracle, though in the latter case they seemed somewhat less happy in praising than in blaming. In 1959 George Morrison's Mise Eire graphically presented the truth of the much-fictionalized Irish troubles; and in 1960 came the first of the films about Hitler, Erwin Leiser's Mein Kampf, to be sharply followed by Rotha's The Life of Adolf Hitler and Louis Clyde Stoumen's rather fanciful Black Fox. Jack Le Vien, producer of the last-named, went on to make successful films about Churchill (The Finest Hours) and the Duke of Windsor (A King's Story). Now every year the compilations come thick and fast. From France, Fourteen-Eighteen; from BBC TV, twenty-six half-hours of The Great War; from Granada TV, The Fanatics (suffragettes), The World of Mr Wells (H. G., that is) and a long-running weekly series, All Our Yesterdays, which consisted entirely of old newsreels; from Associated-British, Time to Remember, a series devoting half an hour to each year of the century; from Italy, Allarmi Siam' Fascisti, a history of the fascist movement; from Japan, Kamikaze, about the suicide pilots; from France, Rossif's Mourir à Madrid and The Fall of Berlin. The list will be endless, because even though every foot of old newsreel were used up, one could begin again, using different editing, juxtapositions and commentary to achieve different effects.

Best book on the subject: Jay Leyda's Films Beget Films.

In the late 50s there began a pleasing fashion for compilations of scenes from fictional films on a theme. This began with Robert Youngson's masterly evocations of silent slapstick: The Golden Age of Comedy, When Comedy Was King, etc. TV series such as Silents Please and Hollywood and the Stars followed suit. In the 70s MGM had an immense success with That's Entertainment, and two sequels, compiled from its past successes, and also brought out The Big Parade of Comedy. Twentieth-Century-Fox turned its backlog into a television series, That's Hollywood; and for a while wherever one looked in Hollywood there was at least one studio cutting room devoted to turning over and reassembling highlights of the past.

have frequently been lauded on cinema screens, usually in storylines that bore little relation to their real lives, and the films were not often box-office successes. Here are some of the subjects of musical biopics:

- George Frederick Handel (1685-1759): Wilfred Lawson, The Great Mr Handel 42.
- Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart (1756-91): Stephen Haggard, Whom the Gods Love 36; Hannes Steltzer, Die Kleine Nachtmusik 39; Gino Cervi, Eternal Melody 39; Oskar Werner, The Life of Mozart 56; Tom Hulce, Amadeus (84).
- Ludwig van Beethoven (1770-1827): Albert Basserman, New Wine 41; Ewald Balser, Eroica 49; Karl Boehm, The Magnificent Rebel 60; Gary Oldman, Immortal Beloved 95.
- Niccolò Paganini (1782-1840): Stewart Granger, The Magic Bow 47.
- Franz Schubert (1797-1828): Nils Asther, Love Time 34; Richard Tauber, Blossom Time 34; Hans Jaray, Unfinished Symphony 35; Alan Curtis, New Wine 41; Tino Rossi, La Belle Meunière 47; Claude Laydu, Symphony of Love 54; Karl Boehm, Das Dreimaederlhaus 58.
- Vincenzo Bellini (1801-35): Phillips Holmes, The Divine Spark 35.
- Hector Berlioz (1803-69): Jean-Louis Barrault, La Symphonie Fantastique 40.
- Frederic Chopin (1810-49): Jean Servais, Adieu 35; Cornel Wilde, A Song to Remember 44; Czeslaw Wollejko, The Young Chopin 52; Alexander Davion, Song Without End 60; Hugh Grant, Impromptu 89; Janusz Olejniczak, La Note Bleue 91.
- Robert Schumann (1810-56): Paul Henreid, Song of Love 47.
- Franz Liszt (1811-86): Stephen Bekassy, A Song to Remember 44; Henry Daniell, Song of Love 47; Will Quadflieg, Lola Montez 55; Dirk Bogarde, Song Without End 60; Henry Gilbert, Song of Norway 70; Roger Daltrey, Lisztomania 75.
- Richard Wagner (1813-83): Alan Badel, Magic Fire 56; Trevor Howard, Ludwig 73; Richard Burton, Wagner 83.
- Johann Strauss Jnr (1825-99): Esmond Knight, Waltzes from Vienna 33; Anton Walbrook, Vienna Waltzes 34. Fernand Gravey, The Great Waltz 38; Kerwin Matthews, The Waltz King 60; Horst Buchholz, The Great Waltz 72.
- Stephen Foster (1826-64): Don Ameche, Swanee River 39; Bill Shirley, I Dream of Jeannie 52.
- Johannes Brahms (1833-97): Robert Walker, Song of Love 47.
- W. S. Gilbert (1836-1911) and Arthur Sullivan (1842-1900): Nigel Bruce and Claud Allister, Lillian Russell 41; Robert Morley and Maurice Evans, The Story of Gilbert and Sullivan 53; Jim Broadbent and Allan Corduner, Topsy-Turvy 99.
- Peter Ilich Tchaikovsky (1840-93): Frank Sundstrom, Song of My Heart 47; Innokenti Smoktunovsky, Tchaikovsky 69; Richard Chamberlain, The Music Lovers 70.
- Edvard Grieg (1843-1907): Toralv Maurstad, Song of Norway 70.
- Nikolai Rimsky-Korsakov (1844-1908): Jean-Pierre Aumont, Song of Scheherezade 47.
- John Philip Sousa (1854-1932): Clifton Webb, Stars and Stripes Forever 52.
- Victor Herbert (1859-1924): Walter Connolly, The Great Victor Herbert 39; Paul Maxey, Till the Clouds Roll By 46.
- Gustav Mahler (1860-1911): Robert Powell, Mahler 74.
- Leslie Stuart (1866-1928): Robert Morley, You Will Remember 40.
- W.C. Handy (1873-1958): Nat King Cole, St Louis Blues 58.
- Jerome Kern (1885-1945): Robert Walker, Till the Clouds Roll By 46.
- Sigmund Romberg (1887-1951): Jose Ferrer, Deep in My Heart 54.
- Irving Berlin (1888-1989): Tyrone Power, Alexander's Ragtime Band 38.
- Cole Porter (1893-1964): Cary Grant, Night and Day 45. Kevin Kline, De-Lovely 04.
- George Gershwin (1898-1937): Robert Alda, Rhapsody in Blue 45.
- Marc Blitzstein (1905-1964): Hank Azaria. Cradle Will Rock 99.

The list of biopics of lesser modern composers would be long indeed.

from the mid-70s became so commonplace as barely to rate a mention, forming the basis of such films as Rollover and War Games and TV series such as Knight Rider and Whiz Kids. Some of their earlier uses in film, however, were in Disney's The Computer Wore Tennis Shoes; in the unpleasant Demon Seed; in space fiction such as The Forbin Project, 2001 and Dark Star; in Billion Dollar Brain; and in a rather advanced TV movie of 1971 called Paper Man. In the beginning, computers tended to be regarded as evil, machines that wanted to control people, as in Superman III or Electric Dreams. But as computers became familiar objects in many homes, and computer and video games grew in popularity, and in turn were often based on hit movies, attitudes changed. Disney's Tron tried to capitalize on computer games, as did Interface, in which a game turned into reality. The appeal of The Lawnmower Man depended on its stunning computer graphics and its simulation of the latest technology of 'virtual reality', a computer-generated world with which people can interact. Androids – half-men, half-computers – emerged as popular heroes in such films as Robocop and The Terminator 2. By 1992, the tail was beginning to wag the dog, with computer games on compact disk incorporating film clips, and the Nintendo game Super Mario Brothers being turned into a movie starring Bob Hoskins. Computers continued to be seen as dangerous devices in Sneakers 92, Hackers 95, Strange Days 95, Lawnmower Man 2: Beyond Cyberspace 95, and The Net 95. In Virtuosity 95, a computerized composite of the world's worst serial killers was let loose in real life. It was not until You've Got Mail 98, in which Tom Hanks and Meg Ryan conducted a romance via e-mail, that computers became cuddly.

Conan the Barbarian.

A warrior from the land of Cimmeria in the Hyborian Age who was created in the 30s by pulp writer Robert E. Howard for the magazine Weird Tales. The stories were later re-edited and rewritten by other hands, and the thick-headed hero gained an increasing popularity from his appearance in Marvel comic-books in the 70s, which culminated in two films, Conan the Barbarian 82 and Conan the Destroyer 84, both starring Arnold Schwarzenegger in the title role. An animated TV series, made in France, was shown in 1992. A TV series, starring Ralf Moeller, followed in 1997-98. Many of the SWORD AND SORCERY films of the 70s and 80s unfortunately show the influence of Howard's hero.

concentration camps, until long after World War II, were thought too harrowing a subject for film treatment; but a few serious reconstructions have emerged, notably The Last Stage (Poland) 48, Kapo (Italy) 60, Passenger (Poland) 61, and One Day in the Life of Ivan Denisovich 71, while the shadow of Auschwitz hangs over The Diary of Anne Frank 59 and The Pawnbroker 64. An alleged British concentration camp in South Africa was depicted in the Nazi film Ohm Krüger 42. The best documentary on the subject was probably Resnais' Night and Fog. In 1978 TV included much footage on the subject in Holocaust, which was quickly followed by Playing for Time. Shoah (1986) used no archive footage at all, but spent its nine hours in long interviews with survivors. Triumph of the Spirit told the true story of a boxer's survival in Auschwitz. Steven Spielberg's stirring Schindler's List 93 told the true story of how one man saved many Jews from the camps, while Paradise Road 97 showed how women imprisoned by the Japanese kept their spirits high by forming a choir. Robert Benigni's Life Is Beautiful 98 was a tragi-comedy in a concentration camp setting.

of serious music naturally figure largely in films about the lives of COMPOSERS, and also in those concerned to show off living musicians: They Shall Have Music, Music for Millions, Battle for Music, Tonight We Sing, Carnegie Hall, A Hundred Men and a Girl, Rhapsody in Blue. In the 40s a string of romantic films were centred on classical musicians and had concert climaxes: Dangerous Moonlight, Love Story, The Seventh Veil, Intermezzo, The Great Lie; this style later returned in Interlude. Other dramatic and comic concerts were featured in Unfaithfully Yours, Tales of Manhattan, The Man Who Knew Too Much, The World of Henry Orient, The Bride Wore Black, Counterpoint and Deadfall. The most influential film concert was certainly Fantasia, and the most poignant probably Myra Hess's recital in the blitz-beset National Gallery in Listen to Britain.

confidence tricksters

have figured as minor characters in hundreds of films, but full-length portraits of the breed are few and choice. Harry Baur in Volpone and Rex Harrison in The Honey Pot; Roland Young, Billie Burke, Janet Gaynor and Douglas Fairbanks Jnr in The Young in Heart; Gene Tierney, Laird Cregar and Spring Byington in Rings on Her Fingers; Tyrone Power in Nightmare Alley and Mississippi Gambler; Mai Zetterling in Quartet; Paul Newman in The Hustler; Charles Coburn and Barbara Stanwyck in The Lady Eve; David Niven and Marlon Brando in Bedtime Story; George C. Scott in The Flim Flam Man; Richard Attenborough and David Hemmings in Only When I Larf; James Garner in The Skin Game; Newman and Robert Redford in The Sting; Ryan and Tatum O'Neal in Paper Moon; James Coburn in Dead Heat on a Merry-go-Round; Joe Mantegna in House of Games, demonstrating how to do it to a bemused Lindsay Crouse; Steve Martin and Michael Caine in Dirty Rotten Scoundrels; John Cusack, Annette Bening and Angelica Huston in The Grifters, Nicolas Cage and Sam Rockwell in Matchstick Men, Gaston Pauls and Ricardo Darin in Nine Queens/Nueve Reinas, which was remade in Hollywood as Criminal with John C. Reilly and Diego Luna.

A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court.

Mark Twain's novel, about a handyman who finds himself transported back in time to King Arthur's Camelot, where he is regarded as a wizard, has been filmed frequently, beginning with a silent version in 1921. It was remade in 1931, with Will Rogers in the lead, and a musical treatment starred Bing Crosby in 1949. A TV movie in 1989 had a young girl taken back in time. Other variations on the story have been made, some of which have failed to credit Twain at all. They include A Spaceman in King Arthur's Court, A Kid in King Arthur's Court, A Young Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court.

continuity errors and boo-boos occur even in the best-regulated movies; sometimes they pass the eagle eye of editor and director and find their way into the release version. Here are a few which have delighted me.

- In Carmen Jones, the camera tracks with Dorothy Dandridge down a shopping street, and the entire crew is reflected in the windows she passes.
- In The Invisible Man, when the naked but invisible hero runs from the police but is given away by his footprints in the snow, the footprints are of shoes, not feet.
- In The Wrong Box, the roofs of Victorian London are disfigured by TV aerials.
- In The Viking Queen, one character is plainly wearing a wrist watch.
- In One Million Years BC, all the girls wear false eyelashes.
- In The Group, set in the 30s, there are several shots of the Pan Am building in New York, built in the 60s.
- In Stagecoach, during the Indian chase across the salt flats one can see the tracks of rubber tyres.
- In Decameron Nights, Louis Jourdan as Paganino the Pirate stands on the deck of his fourteenth-century ship ... and down a hill in the distance trundles a large white truck.
- In Camelot, the character played by Lionel Jeffries first meets King Arthur about an hour into the movie; yet twenty minutes earlier he is plainly visible at the king's wedding.
- In Son of Frankenstein, Basil Rathbone during a train journey draws attention to the weirdly stunted trees ... one of which passes by three times during the conversation.
- In Castle of Fu Manchu, one of the leading characters is referred to in the film as Ingrid, in the synopsis as Anna, and in the end credits as Maria.
- In Tea and Sympathy, a pair of china dogs are back to back in a general view of the scene, but face to face in the close-ups.
- In Dracula, Bela Lugosi refers to Whitby as 'so close to London'. It is in fact 243 miles away.
- In The Yellow Mountain and A Man Alone, both westerns set in the last century, aeroplane vapour trails can be seen in the sky.
- In The King and I, while Yul Brynner is singing 'Puzzlement' he is wearing an earring in some shots but not in others.
- In Emma Hamilton (1969) Big Ben is heard to strike in 1804, fifty years before it was built.
- In The Lodger (1944) London's Tower Bridge is shown, ten years before it was built.
- In Hello Dolly, set at the turn of the century, a modern car lies derelict by the side of the railway track.
- In Anatomy of a Murder, Lee Remick in the café scene wears a dress, but when she walks outside she is wearing slacks.
- In Hangover Square, the introductory title gives the date of the action as 1899, but shortly thereafter a theatre programme shows 1903.
- In Queen Christina, the famous final close-up apparently has the wind blowing in two directions at once, one to get the boat under way and the other to arrange Garbo's hair to the best advantage.
- In The Desk Set, Katharine Hepburn leaves her office carrying a bunch of white flowers. By the time she reaches the pavement they are pink.
- In Knock on Wood, Danny Kaye turns a corner in London's Oxford Street, and finds himself in Ludgate Hill, three miles away.
- In 23 Paces to Baker Street, Van Johnson has an apartment in Portman Square, with a river view which seems to be that of the Savoy Hotel two miles away.
- In Triple Cross, a World War II newspaper bears a headline about the cost of Concorde going up again.
- In The Lady Vanishes, Miss Froy writes her name in the steam on a train window, but two or three shots later the writing is quite different and in another place.
- In The Eddie Cantor Story, the scene is set in 1904, but Eddie sings 'Meet Me Tonight in Dreamland' which was not written till 1909.
- Similarly, in Thoroughly Modern Millie, clearly set in 1922 per the song title, one of the big numbers is 'Baby Face', written in 1926.
- In Miracle on 34th Street, a camera shadow follows Edmund Gwenn and John Payne as they walk across a square.
- In Broken Lance, Katy Jurado's dress changes colour in alternate shots as she stands in a doorway talking to Spencer Tracy at the gate.
- In North by Northwest, Cary Grant's only suit during his stay in Chicago is a different colour out in the prairie from back at the hotel. Hitchcock said this was because of different kinds of lighting which were used.
- In Mysterious Island, set in 1860, an air balloon rises above a nest of TV aerials.
- In The Alamo, mobile trailers are clearly seen in the battle sequences, and a falling stuntman lands on a mattress.
- In North to Alaska during a fistfight, John Wayne loses his toupee and then regains it.
- In The Green Berets, the sun sets in the east during the final shot.
- In The Scalphunters, set in the 1800s, Ossie Davis mentions the planet Pluto, which was not discovered until 1930.
- In Annie, set in 1933, characters go to Radio City Music Hall and see Camille, which was not made until 1937.
- In Yankee Doodle Dandy, the Lusitania is sunk and there is a newspaper picture showing a ship with two funnels. The Lusitania had four funnels.
- In the same film a luggage label with a picture of Nelson's Column bears the legend 'Nelson Square Hotel'.
- In Brief Encounter, Celia Johnson runs through a downpour but remains dry.
- In National Lampoon's Animal House, the word Satan written on a blackboard looks totally different in adjacent shots.
- In Quadrophenia, clearly set in 1964, a cinema is showing Warren Beatty in Heaven Can Wait, made fourteen years later.
- In Carrie, the final dream was projected backwards to achieve the right effect. But in the background a car is also moving backwards...
- In Halloween, which is set in Illinois, all the cars have California number plates.
- In The Birds, the creatures which pursue the children cast no shadows.
- In Cain and Mabel, a workman walks across a sound stage during a production number.
- In The Band Wagon, during the train ride to Baltimore, the scenery is dark on one side and light on the other.
- In Knock on Wood, a policeman rushes upstairs wearing a helmet, and into a room wearing a peaked cap.
- In Silk Stockings, a typewriter shown on a table vanishes in the reverse shot taken from the balcony.
- In Fire Maidens from Outer Space, Sidney Tafler in a T-shirt glances down at his watch, and we get an insert of a watch on a fully-sleeved arm.
- In Genevieve, Kenneth More comes out of a pub carrying a pint of beer, which has become a half pint by the time he reaches his table.
- In The Band Wagon, a theatre is shown on its canopy as the Alcott; but on the programme it says the Stratton.
- In Meet Me In St Louis, during the Trolley Song, one of the extras calls 'Hi, Judy!' Judy Garland's character name is Esther.
- In The Adventures of Robin Hood, Errol Flynn takes a bite at a complete leg of mutton. In the next shot, only a bone is left.
- In Round Midnight, which is set in the 50s, there is a shot of New York's World Trade Center towers, which were built much later.
- In Camelot, Richard Harris plays one scene with a Band-Aid on his neck.
- In North by Northwest, a small boy (who has obviously been to rehearsal) puts his fingers in his ears before Eva Marie Saint picks up a gun to shoot Cary Grant.
- In Mysterious Island, during the air balloon sequence, it is raining above the clouds.
- In The Smallest Show on Earth, although the cinema is supposedly in the north of England, a taxi arriving at it stops outside Hammersmith station.
- In The Corn Is Green, the villagers are all said to be illiterate, but they cluster round to read a poster.
- In The Bridges of Madison County, as Clint Eastwood drives Meryl Streep to Roseman Bridge, they twice pass the same house and a field containing some black cows.
- In Conspiracy Theory, Mel Gibson plays a paranoid taxi driver called Jerry Fletcher. But his identity card displayed in the cab shows the name Raffi Paloulian.
- In James Cameron's Titanic, when the officer of the watch orders 'full starboard rudder' on sighting the iceberg, the helmsman puts the wheel smartly to port. Perhaps (as Rear Admiral J. F. Perowne pointed out) the confusion was caused by the officers wearing their shoulder boards back to front, which is known in the Royal Navy as 'going astern'.

The Count of Monte Cristo.

Film-makers have delighted in Alexandre Dumas's dashing story of Edmond Dantes who, after being falsely imprisoned, escapes to become the wealthy Count of Monte Cristo so that he can revenge himself on his betrayers. Three silent movies, the best of them featuring John Gilbert, were followed by a classic version in 1934, starring the incomparable Robert Donat. Rowland V. Lee directed, as he did for a slighter, original sequel The Son of Monte Cristo. An effective French version in 1953 had Jean Marais as Dantes and Louis Jourdan did well in the title role in a 1961 film directed by Claude Autant-Lara. A Hollywood version in 2002 starred James Caviezel, with Kevin Reynolds directing. There have been several TV movies, including one directed in 1975 by David Greene with Richard Chamberlain.

courtesans

have always been viewed by the cinema through rose-coloured glasses. There have been innumerable films about Madame du Barry, Madame Sans Gêne and Nell Gwyn; Garbo played Camille and Marie Walewska as well as Anna Christie; even Jean Simmons had a shot at Napoleon's Désirée, and Vivien Leighwas a decorative Lady Hamilton. Martine Carol played Lola Montes in the Max Ophüls film, Yvonne de Carlo in Black Bart (in which she became involved in western villainy during an American tour). See also: prostitutes.

have been the suspenseful saving grace of more films than can be counted; and they also figure in some of the best films ever made.

British courts best preserve the ancient aura of the law; among the films they have figured in are London Belongs to Me, The Paradine Case, Eight O'Clock Walk, Life for Ruth, Twenty-one Days, Brothers in Law, The Winslow Boy, Witness for the Prosecution, The Blind Goddess and The Dock Brief. The last four are based on stage plays, as are the American Madame X, Counsellor at Law, and The Trial of Mary Dugan. Other American films depending heavily on courtroom denouements include They Won't Believe Me, The Unholy Three, The Mouthpiece, Boomerang, They Won't Forget, The Missing Juror, Trial, The Young Savages, The Criminal Code, To Kill a Mockingbird, Criminal Lawyer, Fury, The Lawyer, A Free Soul, The Seven Minutes, The People Against O'Hara, The Lady from Shanghai, Twilight of Honour, An American Tragedy (and its remake A Place in the Sun), the several Perry Mason films, Young Mr Lincoln, Philadelphia, The Accused, Class Action, The Crucible, A Few Good Men, Presumed Innocent and The People vs Larry Flynt. These, even the last-named, were fictional: genuine cases were reconstructed in I Want to Live, Cell 2455 Death Row, Compulsion, Inherit the Wind, Dr Ehrlich's Magic Bullet, The Witches of Salem, The Trials of Oscar Wilde, Judgment at Nuremberg, The Life of Emile Zola, Dr Crippen, Captain Kidd, Landru and The Case of Charles Peace. Comedy courtroom scenes have appeared in I'm No Angel, Mr Deeds Goes to Town, You Can't Take It With You, Roxie Hart, My Learned Friend, Adam's Rib, Pickwick Papers, Brothers in Law, What's Up Doc?, Star!, A Pair of Briefs and Cousin Vinny.

Films in which special interest has centred on the jury include Twelve Angry Men, Murder/Enter Sir John, Perfect Strangers/Too Dangerous to Love, Justice est Faite and The Monster and the Girl (in which the criminal brain inside the gorilla murders the jurors at his trial one by one). Ghostly juries figured in All That Money Can Buy and The Remarkable Andrew. The judge has been the key figure in The Judge Steps Out, Talk of the Town, The Bachelor and the Bobbysoxer, and Destry Rides Again; and we are constantly being promised a film of Henry Cecil's No Bail for the Judge. Anatomy of a Murder remains the only film in which a real judge (Joseph E. Welch) has played a fictional one. A lady barrister (Anna Neagle) had the leading role in The Man Who Wouldn't Talk.

Specialized courts were seen in M (convened by criminals), Saint Joan and The Hunchback of Notre Dame (church courts), Black Legion (Ku Klux Klan), The Devil's Disciple (18th-century military court), Kind Hearts and Coronets (a court of the House of Lords), The Wreck of the Mary Deare (mercantile), Cone of Silence (civil aviation), A Tale of Two Cities and The Scarlet Pimpernel (French Revolutionary courts). Courts in other countries were shown in The Lady in Question, The Count of Monte Cristo, Crack in the Mirror, A Flea in Her Ear, La Vérité, and Can Can (French); The Purple Heart (Japanese); The Fall of the Roman Empire (ancient Roman); The Spy Who Came in from the Cold (East German); and Shoeshine (Italian). Coroners' courts were featured in Inquest, My Learned Friend and Rebecca.

Courts martial figured largely in The Caine Mutiny, Time Limit, The Man in the Middle, Across the Pacific, The Rack, Carrington VC, The Court Martial of Billy Mitchell, A Few Good Men and Rules of Engagement. There was also a TV series called Court Martial/Counsellors at War.

Heavenly courts were convened in A Matter of Life and Death, Outward Bound and The Flight That Disappeared; while other fantasy courts appeared in Rashomon, Morgan, One Way Pendulum, Alice in Wonderland, The Balcony, The Wonderful World of the Brothers Grimm, The Trial, All That Money Can Buy, and The Remarkable Andrew. The court in Planet of the Apes is perhaps best classed as prophetic, along with that in 1984.

TV series based on trials and lawyers include The Law and Mr Jones, Harrigan and Son, Sam Benedict, The Trials of O'Brien, Perry Mason, Arrest and Trial, The Defenders, The D.A., The Verdict is Yours, Judd for the Defense, Owen Marshall, Petrocelli, Adam's Rib and L.A. Law.

crazy comedy

has two distinct meanings in the cinema. On one hand it encompasses the Marx Brothers, Hellzapoppin and custard pies; for this see Slapstick. On the other it means the new kind of comedy which came in during the 30s, with seemingly adult people behaving in what society at the time thought was a completely irresponsible way. The Capra comedies, for instance, are vaguely 'agin' the government', upholding Mr Deeds' right to give away his money and play the tuba, the Vanderhofs' right not to work, and Mr Smith's right to be utterly honest. This endearing eccentricity permeated many of the funniest and most modern comedies of the period. William Powell and Myrna Loy in The Thin Man were a married couple who upheld none of the domestic virtues. In Libeled Lady four top stars behaved like low comedians. In My Man Godfrey a rich man pretended to be a tramp and so reformed a party of the idle rich who found him during a 'scavenger hunt'. Theodora Goes Wild, I Met Him in Paris and Easy Living had what we would now call 'kooky' heroines. In True Confession Carole Lombard confessed to a murder she hadn't done, and was told by John Barrymore that she would 'fry'; in Nothing Sacred she pretended to be dying of an obscure disease and was socked on the jaw by Fredric March. Hal Roach introduced comedy ghosts, played by two of Hollywood's most sophisticated stars, in Topper, and followed it up with two sequels as well as three individual and endearingly lunatic comedies called The Housekeeper's Daughter (a battle of fireworks), Turnabout (a husband and wife exchange bodies) and Road Show (an asylum escapee runs a travelling circus). The Awful Truth had no respect for marriage; You Can't Take It With You had no respect for law, business, or the American way of life. A film called Bringing Up Baby turned out to be about a leopard and a brontosaurus bone; Boy Meets Girl was a farcical send-up of Hollywood; and A Slight Case of Murder had more corpses than characters. The Women had its all-female cast fighting like tiger-cats. Road to Singapore began as a romantic comedy but degenerated into snippets from Joe Miller's gag-book; and any Preston Sturges film was likely to have pauses while the smart and witty hero and heroine fell into a pool. In Here Comes Mr Jordan the hero was dead after five minutes or so and spent the rest of the film trying to get his body back.

The genre was by this time well established, and although America's entry into the war modified it somewhat it has remained fashionable and popular ever since. A 1966 film like Morgan may seem rather startling, but in fact it goes little further in its genial anarchy than You Can't Take It With You; only the method of expression is different. What modern crazy comedies lack is the clear pattern which produced so many little masterpieces within a few years: even direct imitations like What's Up Doc? fail to produce the same results.

Crime Doctor

was a series of 'B' features, based on a popular CBS radio show created by Max Marcin, and made by Columbia. They starred Warner Baxter as Dr Robert Ordway, a former gangster who, after a blow on the head caused amnesia, became a criminologist and psychiatrist specializing in solving mysteries.

Crime Doctor 43. Crime Doctor's Strangest Case 43. Shadows in the Night 44. The Crime Doctor's Courage 45. Crime Doctor's Warning 45. Crime Doctor's Man Hunt 46. Just Before Dawn 46. The Millerson Case/The Crime Doctor's Vacation 47. The Crime Doctor's Gamble 47. Crime Doctor's Diary 49.

criminals

- real-life ones – whose careers have been featured in films include Burke and Hare (The Flesh and the Fiends, Burke and Hare), Cagliostro (Black Magic), Al Capone (Little Caesar, The Scarface Mob, Al Capone), Caryl Chessman (Cell 2455 Death Row), Crippen (Dr Crippen), John Wilkes Booth (Prince of Players), Jack the Ripper (The Lodger, A Study in Terror, Jack the Ripper, many others), Landru (Landru, Bluebeard, Monsieur Verdoux, Bluebeard's Ten Honeymoons), Leopold and Loeb (Rope, Compulsion and Swoon), Christie (10 Rillington Place), Charles Peace (The Case of Charles Peace), Dick Turpin, Jesse James, Vidocq (A Scandal in Paris), Robert Stroud (Birdman of Alcatraz), Barbara Graham (I Want to Live), Rasputin, Eddie Chapman (Triple Cross), the Kray brothers (The Krays), Phoolan Devi (The Bandit Queen), Graham Young (The Young Poisoner's Handbook), 'Chopper' Read (Chopper) and the various American public enemies of the 30s: Bonnie and Clyde, Dillinger, Baby Face Nelson, Bloody Mama (Barker), A Bullet for Pretty Boy (Floyd), etc. The clinical 60s also brought accounts of the motiveless murderers of In Cold Blood and of The Boston Strangler. Criminal movements have been very well explored in fictional films, especially the Mafia, the Thugs, Murder Inc. and the racketeers and bootleggers of the 20s.

Very little film criticism is quotable: at its best it is an expression of personality rather than wit. The reviews one remembers tend to be the scathing ones, especially those dismissive one-liners which are really unforgivable but linger over the arch of years:

“ No Leave, No Love. No comment.
I Am a Camera. Me no Leica.
Lost in a Harem. But with Abbott and Costello.
Aimez-vous Brahms? Brahms, oui.
Ben Hur. Loved Ben, hated Hur.
Samson and Delilah. A movie for de Millions.
Bill and Coo. By conservative estimate, one of the God-damnedest things ever seen.

The authors of these pearls are now, by me, forgotten, with the exception of the last, which came from the pen of James Agee, a lamented American writer whose economical, literate reviews delighted all film enthusiasts in the 40s and established a few Hollywood reputations. His collected reviews should all be read with affection; here we can spare room for five of his more waspish put-downs:

Random Harvest. I would like to recommend this film to those who can stay interested in Ronald Colman's amnesia for two hours and who could with pleasure eat a bowl of Yardley's shaving soap for breakfast.

During the making of Pin Up Girl Betty Grable was in an early stage of pregnancy - and everyone else was evidently in a late stage of paresis.

Tycoon. Several tons of dynamite are set off in this picture - none of it under the right people.

You Were Meant For Me. That's what you think.

Star Spangled Rhythm. A variety show including everyone at Paramount who was not overseas, in hiding or out to lunch.

A few more moments of invective. First, Variety on Hedy Lamarr's independent production The Strange Woman:

Hedy bit off more than she could chew, so the chewing was done by the rest of the cast, and what was chewed was the scenery.

And Pamela Kellino on The Egyptian:

One of those great big rotten pictures Hollywood keeps on turning out.

And Stanley Kauffmann on Isadora:

This long but tiny film...

And the New Statesman (Frank Hauser) on Another Man's Poison:

Like reading Ethel M. Dell by flashes of lightning.

And the Saturday Evening Post on Macabre:

It plods along from its opening scene in a funeral parlor to its dénouement in a graveyard, unimpeded by the faintest intrusion of good taste, literacy, or sense.

And Don Herold on The Bride Walks Out:

You've seen this a million times on the screen, but they keep on making it, and folks keep asking me why I am so dyspeptic regarding the cinema. Because I have judgment, is the answer.

And John Simon on Camelot:

This film is the Platonic idea of boredom, roughly comparable to reading a three-volume novel in a language of which one knows only the alphabet.

And David Lardner on Panama Hattie:

This film needs a certain something. Possibly burial.

And Judith Crist on Five Card Stud:

So mediocre that you can't get mad at it.

And Charles Champlin on The Missouri Breaks:

A pair of million dollar babies in a five and ten cent flick.

Now for some self-criticism. Joseph L. Mankiewicz on his own movie Cleopatra:

This picture was conceived in a state of emergency, shot in confusion, and wound up in blind panic.

He also called it:

The toughest three pictures I ever made.

Ethel Barrymore, when asked her opinion of Rasputin and the Empress, in which she co-starred with her brothers Lionel and John, replied:

I thought I was pretty good, but what those two boys were up to I'll never know.

Erich Von Stroheim, reminiscing on his own much-mutilated picture Greed:

When ten years later I saw the film myself, it was like seeing a corpse in a graveyard.

Otto Preminger on Saint Joan:

My most distinguished flop. I've had much less distinguished ones.

And Victor Fleming, director of Gone with the Wind, refusing David O. Selznick's offer of a percentage of the profits instead of salary:

Don't be a damn fool, David. This picture is going to be one of the biggest white elephants of all time.

Philip French on Carry on Emmanuelle:

Put together with an almost palpable contempt for its audience, this relentless sequence of badly written, badly timed dirty jokes is surely one of the most morally and aesthetically offensive pictures to emerge from a British studio.

Similarly misguided was Adolph Zukor when he first read the script of Broken Blossoms:

You bring me a picture like this and want money for it? You may as well put your hand in my pocket and steal it. It isn't commercial. Everyone in it dies.

I can recall only three memorable items of praise. Cecilia Ager on Citizen Kane:

It's as though you had never seen a movie before.

Terry Ramsaye on Intolerance:

The only film fugue.

And Woodrow Wilson on The Birth of a Nation:

Like writing history with lightning. And it's all true.

My own favourite critiques also include Sarah Bernhardt's enthusiastic remark when she saw her 1912 version of Queen Elizabeth:

Mr Zukor, you have put the best of me in pickle for all time.

And the comment of macabre New Yorker cartoonist Charles Addams, when asked his opinion after the première of Cleopatra:

I only came to see the asp.

And the anonymous reviewer of a Jack Benny violin concert:

Jack Benny played Mendelssohn last night. Mendelssohn lost.

Come to that, another anonymous gentleman had a pretty good definition of critics:

Yawning as a profession.

Channing Pollock defined a critic as:

A legless man who teaches running.

To Whitney Balkett he was:

A bundle of biases held together by a sense of taste.

And to Ken Tynan:

A man who knows the way but can't drive a car.

Mel Brooks was scathing:

Critics can't even make music by rubbing their back legs together.

R. W. Emerson was dismissive:

Taking to pieces is the trade of those who cannot construct.

Perhaps the wisest reflection on the critics was made by Rouben Mamoulian:

The most important critic is Time.

Cry the Beloved Country.

Alan Paton's novel of racial tension in South Africa, as a Zulu Christian pastor searches Johannesburg for his missing son, has been filmed twice: in 1951, directed by Zoltan Korda, starring Canada Lee, and in 1995, starring James Earl Jones and Richard Harris and directed by South African Darrell James Roodt.

Crying Freeman.

Heroic and lachrymose hitman of Japanese Manga and anime, created by Kazuo Koike and Ryoichi Ikegami, the basis of two live-action movies made in Hong Kong, in which the character was played by Simon Yam and Sam Hui, and a European production in 1995 in which the role was taken by Mark Dacascos. Three animated Japanese films of the early 90s, which have been released on video dubbed into English, retain the narrative of the original comic books.

Killers Romance 89. Dragon from Russia 90. Crying Freeman Chapter One: Portrait of a Killer 92. Crying Freeman Chapter Two: The Enemy Within 92. Crying Freeman Chapter Three: Retribution 92. Crying Freeman 95.

custard pies

as a comic weapon were evolved in music hall by Fred Karno and at the Keystone studio around 1915, and most silent comedians relied heavily on them. In the 30s Mack Sennett staged a splendid one for a nostalgic farce called Keystone Hotel. Other notable pie fighters have included Laurel and Hardy in The Battle of the Century 28; the whole cast of Beach Party 63; and most of the cast of The Great Race 64 and Smashing Time 65.

Daffy Duck.

Witty, manic duck who was a star of Warner Looney Tunes and Merrie Melodies cartoons from 1937 and evolved into a mischief-making foil to Bugs Bunny and Porky Pig. He is said to have been modelled on Harpo Marx, although he was far more loquacious and developed a spluttering speech impediment in the 50s. He was voiced by Mel Blanc.

The Duckorcist 87. Night of the Living Duck 88, etc.

dance bands.

in the 30s and 40s were so popular as to be stars in their own films: Henry Hall's in Music Hath Charms, Kay Kyser's in half a dozen films including That's Right You're Wrong, Paul Whiteman's in King of Jazz, Tommy and Jimmy Dorsey's in The Fabulous Dorseys. Also frequently on hand to assist the stars were the bands of Glenn Miller, Xavier Cugat, Woody Herman and Harry James, to name but a few. In the 50s bands became too expensive to maintain, but The Glenn Miller Story and The Benny Goodman Story reawakened interest.

Daredevil.

A comic book superhero who was created by Stan Lee and Bill Everett for Marvel Comics in 1964. He is Matt Murdock, a lawyer who lost his sight in an accident with radio-active waste, but gained a radar-like sense instead. He was played by Rex Smith in the TV movie The Trial of the Incredible Hulk 89, and by Ben Affleck in the movie Daredevil 03.

The Dead End Kids

were Gabriel Dell, Huntz Hall, Billy Halop, Bobby Jordan, Leo Gorcey and Bernard Punsley, a group of young actors who appeared in Sidney Kingsley's Broadway play of slum life, Dead End, and were hired by Sam Goldwyn to repeat their roles on film in 1937. They went on to make six other gangster films for Warner, and some also appeared in a series for Universal, The Dead End Kids and Little Tough Guys. The group reformed in various combinations as the East Side Kids and The Bowery Boys, turning out 'B' features that soon emphasized comedy rather than crime.

Angels with Dirty Faces 38. Crime School 38. They Made Me a Criminal 39. Hell's Kitchen 39. The Angels Wash Their Faces 39. On Dress Parade 39.

deaf mutes

have been movingly portrayed by Jane Wyman in Johnny Belinda, Mandy Miller in Mandy, Harry Bellaver in No Way Out, and Alan Arkin in The Heart Is a Lonely Hunter. Dorothy McGuire in The Spiral Staircase was mute but not deaf, as was Samantha Morton in Sweet and Lowdown; Patty Duke in The Miracle Worker was deaf but could make sounds.

has always fascinated film-makers, though the results have often appeared undergraduate-ish, as fantasy tends to look when brought down to a mass-appeal level. Death has been personified in Death Takes a Holiday by Fredric March, in the 1971 TV remake by Monte Markham and Martin Brest's 1998 remake Meet Joe Black, in On Borrowed Time by Cedric Hardwicke, in Here Comes Mr Jordan by Claude Rains, in Orphée by Maria Casarès, in The Seventh Seal by Bengt Ekerot, by Richard Burton in Boom, by George Jessel in Hieronymous Merkin and by several actors in The Masque of the Red Death. In Devotion, Ida Lupino as Emily Brontë dreamed of death on horseback coming to sweep her away; in The Bluebird Shirley Temple ventured into the land of the dead to see her grandparents. Most of the characters in Thunder Rock, and all in Outward Bound (remade as Between Two Worlds and later varied for TV as Haunts of the Very Rich) were already dead at the start of the story. Other films to involve serious thought about death include Dark Victory, Jeux Interdits, All the Way Home, Sentimental Journey, No Sad Songs for Me, One Way Passage, Paths of Glory, Wild Strawberries, and Ikuru. Flatliners and The Rapture both dealt with experiences after death.

Comedies taking death lightly included A Slight Case of Murder, Kind Hearts and Coronets, The Trouble with Harry, Too Many Crooks, The Criminal Life of Archibaldo de la Cruz, Send Me No Flowers, The Assassination Bureau, The Loved One, The Wrong Box, Arrivederci Baby, Kiss the Girls and Make Them Die, Arsenic and Old Lace, Une Journée Bien Remplie, and Weekend at Bernie's.

are seldom popular chaps, but Preston Sturges made a film about one of them, the inventor of laughing gas: The Great Moment. The Counterfeit Traitor had a spy dentist. Sinister dentists were found in The Man Who Knew Too Much (original version), The Secret Partner, and Footsteps in the Dark, and comic ones, in the person of Bob Hope, in The Paleface. Dentistry is the subject of two British farces: Dentist in the Chair and Dentist on the Job. W.C. Fields once made a film of his sketch The Dentist; and Laurel and Hardy in Leave 'Em Laughing were overcome by laughing gas. The most notable dentist hero was in the twice remade One Sunday Afternoon; and the most villainous dentist is certainly Laurence Olivier in Marathon Man, though Corbin Bernsen in Brian Yuzna's horror movie The Dentist and its sequel will leave audiences squirming. The dentists with the most hectic private lives were Walter Matthau in Cactus Flower and Steve Martin in Novocaine. The oddest were Daniel Day-Lewis as a motorcycling enthusiast for dental hygiene in Eversmile, New Jersey and Kirstie Alley in the TV movie Toothless, as a dentist who dies and becomes the Tooth Fairy. The least alluring of movie titles must be Alan Rudolph's The Secret Lives of Dentists, 02, based on Jane Smiley's novella The Age of Grief.

department stores

have usually been a background for comedy. New York store backgrounds have often shown the native superiority of the working girl to snobbish shopwalkers and obtuse management, as in Bachelor Mother and its remake Bundle of Joy, The Devil and Miss Jones and Manhandled 24. Broader comedy elements were to the fore in Miracle on 34th Street, Modern Times, The Big Store, Who's Minding the Store?, Fitzwilly and How to Save a Marriage. British comedies with store settings include Kipps, The Crowded Day, Laughter in Paradise, Keep Fit, and Trouble in Store.

desert islands have provided the locale of many a film adventure. Robinson Crusoe has been filmed several times, with two variations in Robinson Crusoe on Mars and Lt Robin Crusoe USN. Treasure Island too has survived three or four versions, to say nothing of imitations like Blackbeard the Pirate and parodies such as Abbott and Costello Meet Captain Kidd and Old Mother Riley's Jungle Treasure. The Admirable Crichton is perhaps the next most overworked desert island story, with The Swiss Family Robinson following on. Dorothy Lamour found a few desert islands in films like Typhoon and Aloma of the South Seas; the inhabitants of The Little Hut had one nearly to themselves; Joan Greenwood and co. were marooned on a rather special one in Mysterious Island. Our Girl Friday played the theme for sex; Dr Dolittle found educated natives on one; Cary Grant lived on one as a reluctant spy in Father Goose; Sea Wife, Lord of the Flies and The Day the Fish Came Out were three recent but not very successful attempts to take the theme seriously: Hell in the Pacific was one that did work. The Blue Lagoon was treated decorously in the 50s and sexily in the 80s. In 2000, Tom Hanks became Cast Away on one for more than four years, reduced to talking to a football.

A comic TV series on the subject was Gilligan's Island 64-66; a serious one, The New People 69.

have figured in many a western, from Tumbleweed to Mackenna's Gold. Other films which have paid particularly respectful attention to the dangers that too much sand can provide include The Sheik and Son of the Sheik, Greed, The Lost Patrol, The Garden of Allah, Sahara, Five Graves to Cairo, Ice Cold in Alex, Sea of Sand, Desert Rats, Play Dirty, An Eye for an Eye, Inferno, Zabriskie Point, The Sabre and the Arrow, Legend of the Lost, The Ten Commandments, She, Lawrence of Arabia, The Black Tent, Oasis, Sands of The Kalahari, The Flight of the Phoenix, Garden of Evil and The Professionals.

has made frequent appearances in movies. There were versions of Faust in 1900, 1903, 1904, 1907, 1909, 1911, 1921 and 1925, the last of these featuring Emil Jannings as Mephistopheles. Later variations on this theme include The Sorrows of Satan 27, with Adolphe Menjou; All That Money Can Buy 41, with Walter Huston as Mr Scratch; Alias Nick Beal 49, with Ray Milland; La Beauté du Diable 50 with Gérard Philipe; Damn Yankees 58 with Ray Walston; Bedazzled 67 with Peter Cook, remade in 00 with Elizabeth Hurley; and Doctor Faustus 68 with Andreas Teuber. In other stories, Satan was played by Helge Nissen in Leaves From Satan's Book 20, Jules Berry in Les Visiteurs du Soir 42, Alan Mowbray in The Devil with Hitler 42, Rex Ingram in Cabin in the Sky 43, Laird Cregar in Heaven Can Wait 43, Claude Rains in Angel on My Shoulder 46, Stanley Holloway in Meet Mr Lucifer 53, Richard Devon in The Undead 56, Vincent Price in The Story of Mankind 57, Cedric Hardwicke in Bait 54, Vittorio Gassman in The Devil in Love 67, Stig Järrel in The Devil's Eye 60, Donald Pleasence in The Greatest Story Ever Told 65, Burgess Meredith in Torture Garden 68, Pierre Clementi in The Milky Way 68, Ralph Richardson in Tales From the Crypt 71, Rod Dumont in the erotic-horror The Devil Inside Her 76, John Ritter in Wholly Moses 80, Robert Helpmann in Second Time Lucky 84, Leo Marks in The Last Temptation of Christ 88, Bruce Payne in Switch 91, Barry Gerdsen in the horror movie The Good Book 97, Jeroen Krabbé in the TV movie Jesus 99, Colin Fox in the TV movie Angels in the Infield 00 and Harvey Keitel in Little Nicky 00. In the Swedish Witchcraft through the Ages 21, the devil was played by the director, Benjamin Christensen. Devil worship has been the subject of The Black Cat 34, The Seventh Victim 43, Night of the Demon 57, Back from the Dead 57, The Witches 66, Eye of the Devil 66, The Devil Rides Out 68, Rosemary's Baby 68; while the last-named presaged a rash of diabolically-inspired children in The Exorcist, I Don't Want to be Born, It's Alive, Devil Within Her and The Omen.

Devil's Island,

the French Guianan penal colony, has intermittently fascinated film-makers. Apart from the versions of the Dreyfus case (Dreyfus, The Life of Emile Zola, I Accuse), there have been Ronald Colman in Condemned to Devil's Island, Donald Woods in I Was a Prisoner on Devil's Island, Boris Karloff in Devil's Island, Clark Gable in Strange Cargo, Humphrey Bogart in Passage to Marseilles, Bogart and company in We're No Angels, Eartha Kitt in Saint of Devil's Island, Steve McQueen in Papillon, and Jim Brown in I Escaped From Devil's Island. The prison colony opened in 1852 and closed in 1946.

Dick Barton.

Tough British special agent, created by Edward J. Mason, who was the hero of a popular radio programme 1946-51, and three low-budget films starring Don Stannard. In 1978, Tony Vogel played him in an unsuccessful television series.

Dick Tracy.

The lantern-jawed detective of the comic strips made sporadic film appearances, notably when impersonated by Ralph Byrd or Morgan Conway in a number of 40s second features and serials. In 1951 Byrd starred in a TV series. Tracy also appeared in a TV cartoon series in the 50s, in TV Funnies in 1971, and in the big-budget film of 1990, starring Warren Beatty.

Die Hard.

The film starring Bruce Willis as a tough cop outwitting a group of terrorists who had taken his wife and others hostage in a skyscraper was followed by two sequels that repeated the formula, first in an airport and then in various New York locations. The popularity of the series led to similar movies of lone heroes battling against overwhelming odds in claustrophobic situations, which were usually defined in terms of the original: Passenger 57 ('Die Hard on a plane'), Under Siege ('Die Hard on a boat'), On Lonely Ground ('Die Hard on ice'), Speed ('Die Hard on a bus'), etc. In similar fashion, the Die Hard sequels were adapted from already existing scripts. The addition of Samuel L. Jackson as Willis's sidekick in the third film seemed an attempt to emulate the Lethal Weapon series which coupled Mel Gibson with Danny Glover. The first and third films were directed by John McTiernan, the second by Renny Harlin. A fourth film in the series is likely to follow in 2006.

have been a cinematic favourite since the earliest days of cinema, when Winsor McCay appeared with his cartoon creation Gertie in 1909. But it was The Lost World 25 which proved to be the template for virtually all the succeeding dinosaur films. This silent movie adaptation of Conan Doyle's novel of an isolated plateau where prehistoric monsters survived improved on the original. Where that had a pterodactyl loose in London, the film sent a brontosaurus rampaging through the streets, attacking Tower Bridge (special effects by Willis O'Brien). It was a scene that became a standard in most subsequent movies, from the Japanese series that began with Godzilla, King of the Monsters! 54, in which Tokyo was flattened, to Gorgo, which brought a monster swimming up the Thames to rescue its offspring; Behemoth the Sea Monster 58, which was just another Beast from Twenty Thousand Fathoms, also gave London a going-over. The Godzilla movies, in which the beast progressed from ravening monster to a saviour of mankind, also drew on the dinosaur battles from King Kong 33, in which O'Brien refined the stop-motion techniques he used in The Lost World. The problem of getting man and dinosaur into the same setting was solved in many ways: One Million BC simply ignored the anachronism, using lizards optically enlarged and a stuntman in a suit for its creatures, and covering elephants with fur to pass as mastodons; its footage was to turn up in later, low-budget efforts, such as Bert I. Gordon's King Dinosaur 55. Unknown Island 48, The Land that Time Forgot and its sequel The People that Time Forgot used a similar amnesiac low-budget approach. Hammer's remake One Million Years BC used stop-motion for the beasts, although the film is remembered, if at all, for Raquel Welch in a fur bikini. Hammer also made When Dinosaurs Ruled the Earth 70, which again relied on the sex appeal of its leading lady. Others used nuclear power to revive the long-dead creatures, including The Beast from Twenty Thousand Fathoms, with special effects by Ray Harryhausen. The Land Unknown 57 put them in a lost, underground world beneath the Pole, as did Journey to the Center of the Earth 59, which again used real lizards (ignoring modern thinking which believes that dinosaurs are related to birds rather than reptiles), and The Last Dinosaur 77. Lizards again turn up in the 60s remake of The Lost World. Jurassic Park was scientifically more advanced, using modern techniques of DNA cloning to bring the creatures back; it and its two sequels once again made dinosaurs monster box-office (special effects by Stan Winston and others), although the mutated creatures of Super Mario Bros proved that special effects were not enough on their own to make a successful film, and Roger Corman's attempt to cash in on the craze with Carnosaur proved to be no more than a throwback to 50s monster films. There have been two dinosaur westerns, The Beast of Hollow Mountain 56 and The Valley of the Gwangi 68. Walt Disney has used dinosaurs to good effect in two animated films: Fantasia 40 and Dinosaur 00, which had dazzling computer-generated animation married to a fossilised story. They were also to be found in Steven Spielberg's jokey We're Back: A Dinosaur's Story, and The Land before Time, though it took a TV mini-series Dinotopia to provide audiences with civilised, talking dinosaurs co-existing with humans.

directors' appearances

in films are comparatively few. Hitchcock remains the unchallengeable winner, with moments in over thirty of his fifty-odd films, including the confined Rope (in which his outline appears on a neon sign) and Lifeboat (in which he can be seen in a reducing ad. in a newspaper). Preston Sturges can be glimpsed in Sullivan's Travels, and in Paris Holiday, as a French resident, gets a whole scene to himself. John Huston, uncredited, plays a tourist in The Treasure of the Sierra Madre and a master of foxhounds in The List of Adrian Messenger; he later began to take sizeable credited roles, e.g. in The Cardinal and The Bible. The Paramount lot became a familiar scene in many 40s pictures, with notable guest appearances by Mitchell Leisen in Hold Back the Dawn and Cecil B. de Mille in Sunset Boulevard, The Buster Keaton Story, Star-Spangled Rhythm, Variety Girl, Son of Paleface and others. Jean Cocteau played an old woman in Orphée and appeared throughout The Testament of Orphée. Nicholas Ray was the American ambassador in 55 Days in Peking. Jules Dassin played major roles in Rififi (as Perlo Vita) and Never on Sunday, as did Jean Renoir in La Règle du Jeu. Hugo Fregonese was a messenger in Decameron Nights, Samuel Fuller a Japanese cop in House of Bamboo and as himself in Pierrot le Fou and other films. Others who can be glimpsed in their own work include Tony Richardson in Tom Jones, Michael Winner in You Must Be Joking, George Marshall in The Crime of Dr Forbes, Frank Borzage in Jeanne Eagels, Robert Aldrich in The Big Knife, Ingmar Bergman in Waiting Women, King Vidor in Our Daily Bread, William Castle (producer) in Rosemary's Baby, Claude Chabrol in Les Biches and The Road to Corinth, Joseph Losey in The Intimate Stranger (which he made under the name of Joseph Walton) and M. Night Shyamalan in his supernatural thrillers. Huston, Polanski, Truffaut, and Bondarchuk are among those who have played major roles in their own and other films. Woody Allen and Clint Eastwood are among the busiest of actor-directors. Geroge Clooney is the latest actor to turn director and also play a role in his films.

disaster films

have always been popular. In the 30s large crowds flocked to see Tidal Wave, San Francisco, The Last Days of Pompeii, In Old Chicago and The Rains Came. World War II was disaster enough for the 40s, but the 50s brought Titanic, A Night to Remember, and Invasion USA, and the 60s The Devil at Four O'Clock and Krakatoa East of Java. It was the 70s, however, that found the killing of large numbers of people to be really top box office. Earthquake and The Towering Inferno were giants of their kind, and even though The Hindenburg was not clever enough to attract, there were plenty of successful imitators: The Swarm, Avalanche, Meteor, etc. A new cycle began in the mid-90s, featuring such large-scale natural disasters as hurricanes (Twister), erupting volcanoes (Dante's Peak; Volcano) and looming asteroids (Deep Impact; Armageddon). TV contributions include Smash-up on Interstate Five, Hanging by a Thread, The Death of Ocean View Park and Disaster on the Coastliner.

has featured in many hundreds of films, and was in the 20s the perquisite of Lon Chaney, all of whose later films featured it. Lon Chaney Jnr has also had a tendency to it, as had John Barrymore; while most of the Sherlock Holmes films involved it. Other notable examples include Henry Hull in Miracles for Sale; Donald Wolfit in The Ringer; Marlene Dietrich in Witness for the Prosecution; Jack Lemmon and Tony Curtis in Some Like It Hot; Alec Guinness in Kind Hearts and Coronets; Peter Sellers in The Naked Truth and After the Fox; Rod Steiger in No Way to Treat a Lady; Tony Randall in Seven Faces of Dr Lao; John Barrymore in Bulldog Drummond Comes Back; Michael Caine in Sleuth; Dustin Hoffman in Tootsie; and practically the entire cast of The List of Adrian Messenger. It was taken to extremes by Nicolas Cage and John Travolta in Face/Off, where each was surgically altered to resemble the other, and by Tom Cruise and Dougray Scott in Mission: Impossible 2. Extensions of disguise are the split personality films: Dr Jekyll and Mr Hyde, Lizzie, The Three Faces of Eve, Sybil, Darkman.

Django.

Eponymous machinegun-toting hero of a spaghetti western that spawned many sequels, including several that had no connection with the original, but were simply renamed outside Italy in order to cash in on the international success of a film that was banned for many years in Britain. The ploy worked because the genre so often featured a dark, morose, lone gunfighter. The first in the series, directed by Sergio Corbucci in 1966, starred Franco Nero, who also appeared in a sequel, Django 2: The Big Comeback, in 1987.

Dr Christian

was the kindly country doctor hero, played by Jean Hersholt, of a number of unambitious little films which came out between 1938 and 1940, based on a radio series and inspired by the publicity surrounding Dr Dafoe, who delivered the Dionne Quins in 1934. In 1956 Macdonald Carey featured in a TV series of the same name, but he played the nephew of the original Dr Christian.

Dr Mabuse.

The criminal mastermind was created by novelist Norbert Jacques and first filmed in 1922 by Fritz Lang in the two-part Doctor Mabuse, the Gambler/Doktor Mabuse, der Spieler, starring Rudolf Klein-Rogge, who repeated the role in Lang's 1933 sound film The Testament of Dr Mabuse/Das Testament des Dr Mabuse, which was banned by the Nazis and led to Lang fleeing to America. He returned to West Germany in 1960 to make the less successful The Thousand Eyes of Dr Mabuse/Die Tausend Augen des Dr Mabuse with Wolfgang Preiss in the role. In 1990, Claude Chabrol updated Jacques' original novel in Docteur M/Club Extinction, starring Alan Bates, but the story no longer seemed plausible.

Dr Who.

Ageless time traveller with a time machine, the Tardis, disguised as a police box. Created by producer Sydney Newman as a science-fiction TV series in 1963, its mixture of fantasy, adventure and comedy captured the imagination of the nation and became almost required viewing in the 60s, especially in adventures involving the Daleks, aliens encased in what looked like mobile pepperpots, whose conversation consisted mainly of 'Exterminate! Exterminate!' Also featuring men in rubber suits as aliens, its popularity waned as some odd choices were made in casting the title role, and its run of 695 episodes ended in 1989. It gave rise to a stage play and two dull films starring Peter Cushing as the Doctor. On TV the role was played by William Hartnell (with Richard Hurndall substituting for him after his death in one episode featuring five incarnations of the Doctor), Patrick Troughton, Jon Pertwee, Tom Baker, Peter Davison, Colin Baker, and Sylvester McCoy. A pilot for a television series produced by Steven Spielberg was shown in 1996, starring Paul McGann in the title role, but it lacked the charm of the original. BBC TV revived the series in 2005, with Christopher Eccleston in the title role; after the first series he was replaced by David Tennant.

Dr Who and the Daleks 65. Daleks: Invasion Earth 2150 AD 66.

(in the medical sense) have been crusading heroes of many movies: fictional epics that come readily to mind include Arrowsmith, The Citadel, Magnificent Obsession, Private Worlds, Men in White, The Green Light, Disputed Passage, Yellow

Jack, The Last Angry Man, Not as a Stranger, Johnny Belinda, The Girl in White, The Doctor and the Girl, Green Fingers, The Outsider, The Crime of Dr Forbes, The Interns, The New Interns, The Young Doctors, Behind the Mask, Doctor Zhivago, and White Corridors. A few have even commanded whole series to themselves: Dr Kildare, Dr Christian, Dr Gillespie, The Crime Doctor. Once-living doctors have received the accolade of a Hollywood biopic: The Story of Louis Pasteur, Dr Ehrlich's Magic Bullet, Prisoner of Shark Island (Dr Mudd), L'Enfant Sauvage (Dr Jean Retard), The Story of Dr Wassell, Il Est Minuit Dr Schweitzer. Many less single-minded films have had a background of medicine and doctors as leading figures: The Nun's Story, Kings Row, No Way Out, People Will Talk, The Hospital. More or less villainous doctors were found in The Flesh and the Fiends, Frankenstein, Dr Socrates, Dr Jekyll and Mr Hyde, Green for Danger, Dr Cyclops, The Hands of Orlac, Dr Goldfoot, The Amazing Dr Clitterhouse, and Malice.

TV series on medical subjects have included Medic 54-55. Ben Casey 60-65. Dr Kildare 61-66. Dr Christian 56. Dr Hudson's Secret Journal 55-56. The Nurses 62-63. The Doctors and the Nurses 64. Marcus Welby MD 69. The Bold Ones 68-72. Police Surgeon 72. St Elsewhere 82-88. Ryan's Four 83. And, in the 90s, Casualty and ER.

A Dog of Flanders,

a novel written by Ouida in 1872 about a stray dog who finds a runaway boy, has been filmed five times: as a silent in 1914; and in 1924, under the title Boy of Flanders, by Victor Schertzinger and starring Jackie Coogan; in 1935 by Edward Sloman, starring Frankie Thomas; in 1959 by James B. Clark, starring David Ladd, and in 1999 by Kevin Brodie, starring Jesse James and Jeremy James Kissner as the boy.

Don Juan.

The amorous adventures of this legendary rascal, a heartless seducer created in stories by Gabriel Tellez (1571-1641), have been filmed several times, notably with John Barrymore in 1927, Douglas Fairbanks Snr in 1934, Errol Flynn in 1948 and (of all people) Fernandel in 1955. Versions of the opera, Don Giovanni, are legion: the most elaborate was directed by Joseph Losey in 1979.

Don Quixote.

There have been many screen versions of Cervantes' picaresque novel about the adventures of the addled knight and his slow but faithful lieutenant Sancho Panza ... but none have been entirely successful because the genius of the book is a purely literary one. There was a French production in 1909; an American one in 1916 directed by Edward Dillon; a British one in 1923 directed by Maurice Elvey and starring Jerrold Robertshaw with George Robey. In 1933 Pabst made a British film of the story with Chaliapin and (again) George Robey; meanwhile a Danish director, Lau Lauritzen, had done one in 1926. The next batch of Quixotes began in 1947 with Rafael Gil's Spanish version; but the Russian production of 1957, directed by Kozintsev with Cherkassov in the title role, was probably the best of all. Orson Welles filmed sections of his own version, which it looks as though we may never see, though edited versions are being screened at festivals; a Jugoslavian cartoon version appeared in 1961; in 1962 Finland, of all nations, contributed its own Quixote, directed by Eino Ruutsalo; in 1972 the BBC and Universal made a TV film with Rex Harrison; in2000 Peter Yates directed John Lithgow in the role in another TV version, and Juan Louis Galiardo played the Don in a Spanish film El Caballero Don Quixote in 2002, directed by Manuel Gutierrez Aragon, who had previously tackled the subject in a TV mini-series starring Fernando Rey. All that is left of director Terry Gilliam's attempt, which was to have starred Jean Rochfort is a documentary Lost in La Mancha, depicting how quickly the film fell apart on location. The popular stage musical Man of La Mancha, filmed in 1972, is based on the life of author Miguel de Cervantes (1547-1616) and its correlation with that of his hero. There followed in 1973 a ballet version with Rudolph Nureyev.

Donald Duck.

Belligerent Disney cartoon character who was introduced in 1934 in The Wise Little Hen, was quickly streamlined and became more popular than Mickey Mouse. Still going strong.

Dracula.

The Transylvanian vampire count created by Bram Stoker in his novel published 1897 has been on the screen in many manifestations. Max Schreck played him in Murnau's German silent Nosferatu 23. Bela Lugosi first donned the cloak for Universal's Dracula 31, was not in Dracula's Daughter 36 but reappeared as one of Dracula's relations in Return of the Vampire 44 and played the Count in Abbott and Costello Meet Frankenstein 48. Lon Chaney Jnr starred in Son of Dracula 43; John Carradine took over in House of Frankenstein 45 and House of Dracula 45; Francis Lederer had a go in The Return of Dracula 58. Also in 1958 came the British remake of the original Dracula (Horror of Dracula) with Christopher Lee; David Peel was one of the Count's disciples in Brides of Dracula 60 and Noel Willman another in Kiss of the Vampire 63; while Lee ingeniously reappeared in 1965 as Dracula Prince of Darkness, in 1968 in Dracula Has Risen from the Grave, in 1969 in Taste the Blood of Dracula, and in 1970 in Scars of Dracula. In the same year Ingrid Pitt was Countess Dracula and 1972 brought Vampire Circus. Meanwhile the Count had American rivals in Count Yorga, in The House of Dark Shadows and in Blacula. (Hollywood in 1957 had produced a lady vampire in Blood of Dracula, and in 1965 Billy the Kid Meets Dracula. Polanski's failed satire of 1967, The Fearless Vampire Killers, had Ferdy Mayne as Von Krolock, who was Dracula in all but name.) Dracula AD 1972 and The Satanic Rites of Dracula were further variations on the main theme, both with Mr Lee; while Jack Palance in 1973 did a TV film version of the original story for Dan Curtis. It seemed that the Count, though officially dead, was unlikely ever to lie down for long; but no one could have been prepared for the profusion of Dracula variations of the late 70s, by which time Hammer had given up participating. Klaus Kinski aped Schreck in a remake of Nosferatu. George Hamilton appeared in a sexy spoof, Love at First Bite. Laurence Olivier played Van Helsing to Frank Langella's Dracula. Would it never end? No, it wouldn't. Francis Ford Coppola's Bram Stoker's Dracula in 1992 began another frenzied cycle of vampire movies. The cycle came full circle with Shadow of the Vampire 00, in which Willem Dafoe played Max Schreck as a real vampire in a movie about the making of Nosferatu.

dreams,

with their opportunities for camera magic and mystery, are dear to Hollywood's heart. The first film with dream sequences followed by a psychological explanation was probably Pabst's Secrets of a Soul; the trick caught on very firmly in such later pictures as Lady in the Dark, A Matter of Life and Death, Spellbound, Dead of Night, Fear in the Night, Farewell My Lovely, The Secret Life of Walter Mitty, Possessed, Dream Girl, Three Cases of Murder and The Night Walker. In Vampyr and Wild Strawberries the hero dreamed of his own funeral; and in Devotion Ida Lupino dreamed of death as a man on horseback coming across the moor to sweep her away. Stories were also told as in a series of daydreams by the main character, the past mingling with the present, as in Death of a Salesman and I Was Happy Here. Roman Scandals, A Connecticut Yankee at the Court of King Arthur, Ali Baba Goes to Town, Fiddlers Three and Dreaming are but five examples of the many comedies in which a character has been knocked on the head and dreams himself back in some distant time.

In the mid-40s such films as The Woman in the Window, The Strange Affair of Uncle Harry and The Horn Blows at Midnight set the fashion for getting the hero out of some impossible situation by having him wake up and find he'd been dreaming. This was scarcely fair in adult films, though it had honourable origins in Alice in Wonderland and The Wizard of Oz. Nor is there much excuse for the other favourite script trick of having one's cake and eating it, as in Portrait of Jennie and Miracle in the Rain, when some ghostly occurrence to the hero is passed off as a dream until he finds some tangible evidence – a scarf, a coin or some other memento – that it was real.

The closest a film dream came to coming true was in The Night My Number Came Up, when the foreseen air crash was narrowly averted. In the brilliantly clever frame story of Dead of Night, the hero dreams he will commit a murder, and does, only to wake up and find the whole sequence of events beginning again: he is caught in an endless series of recurring nightmares. A Nightmare on Elm Street developed the idea of dreams becoming real, with its sadistic child murderer haunting the horrific dreams of a group of teenagers who burned him to death, only to find that the power of their emotions brings him back to life. Its many sequels continued the nightmare until it became quite soporific. The notion was developed with more subtlety in Paperhouse, in which a young girl dreams her drawings into existence. In In Dreams, a woman found that she could communicate with a serial killer in her dreams, while The Cell had a psychiatrist exploring the hallucinatory-like mind of another killer. Richard Linklater's Waking Life 01 dealt with a man unsure whether he was asleep or awake as he tried to make sense of life.

Droopy.

Stony-faced, lugubrious bloodhound star of MGM cartoons. Created by Tex Avery, he was inspired by Wallace Wimple, of the popular radio comedy The Fibber McGee and Molly Show, played by Bill Thompson, who first supplied the voice for Droopy.

drug addiction, long forbidden by the Hays Code, even in Sherlock Holmes films (though it featured in Chaplin's Easy Street in 1917), has recently been the subject of many intense reforming movies such as The Man with the Golden Arm, A Hatful of Rain, Bigger than Life, Monkey on My Back and Synanon. Confessions of an Opium Eater, on the other hand, is a throwback to the Hollywood films of the 20s, when almost every adventure involved a chase through a Chinatown opium den. The addiction has provided plots for many thrillers about the tireless efforts of agents of the US Narcotics Bureau: Johnny Stool Pigeon, To the Ends of the Earth, Sol Madrid, The Poppy is Also a Flower, The French Connection, etc. In the late 60s and beyond drugs began to be advocated as a permissible opting out, or to be freely and seriously discussed, in such films as Cheech and Chong's Up in Smoke and other stoned comedies, The Trip, Chappaqua and Beyond the Valley of the Dolls; Panic in Needle Park; Born to Win; Believe in Me; Jennifer on my Mind, Lenny, Midnight Express, Deep Cover, Bad Lieutenant, Bad Boys, Another Day in Paradise, Brokedown Palace, Go, Trainspotting, Human Traffic, and 24 Hour Party People. Big-time dealers in drugs were the subject of Traffic 00 and Blow 01.

drunk scenes

have been the delight of many actors as well as audiences. Who can judge between the charms of the following? Greta Garbo in Ninotchka; Robert Montgomery in June Bride; Jean Arthur in Mr Smith Goes to Washington; Laurel and Hardy in The Bohemian Girl and Scram; Lionel Barrymore in A Free Soul; Eva Marie Saint in That Certain Feeling; Errol Flynn in The Sun Also Rises; Katharine Hepburn in The Desk Set; Leslie Caron in Father Goose; Fredric March in There Goes My Heart; Lee Marvin in Cat Ballou (accompanied by a drunken horse); Albert Finney in Saturday Night and Sunday Morning; Alan Bates in A Kind of Loving; Bette Davis in Dark Victory; Claudia Cardinale in The Pink Panther; Charles Laughton in Hobson's Choice; Katharine Hepburn in The Philadelphia Story and State of the Union; Lucille Ball in Yours Mine and Ours; Arthur Askey in The Love Match; Dan Dailey in It's Always Fair Weather; Vanessa Redgrave in Isadora; Julie Andrews in Star!; Dudley Moore in Arthur; Dean Martin and Tony Curtis in Who Was That Lady? Martin indeed deliberately built himself an off-screen alcoholic reputation, as did W. C. Fields.

Dudley Do-Right,

a dim-witted, good-hearted Mountie, was a regular on the TV cartoon series Rocky and His Friends 59-61, The Bullwinkle Show, which was originally shown 61-63 and re-broadcast frequently, and The Dudley Do-Right Show 69-70. A live-action movie of his exploits, starring Brendan Fraser and written and directed by Hugh Wilson, was released in 1999.

duels

are fought in hundreds of low-budget action dramas, but the well-staged ones are rare enough to be recounted. Basil Rathbone fought Errol Flynn in The Adventures of Robin Hood (and later spoofed the occasion in The Court Jester). He also lost to Tyrone Power in The Mark of Zorro; Flynn also encountered Rathbone in Captain Blood and Henry Daniell in The Sea Hawk. Douglas Fairbanks Snr fought duels in The Mark of Zorro, The Black Pirate and others; Douglas Fairbanks Jnr was a memorable opponent for Ronald Colman in The Prisoner of Zenda (later restaged for James Mason and Stewart Granger and mimicked by Tony Curtis and Ross Martin in The Great Race) and duelled again in The Corsican Brothers. Granger also duelled with Mason in Fanny by Gaslight, but used pistols this time; it was back to foils again for Scaramouche and Swordsman of Siena. John Barrymore fought splendid duels in his silent films, notably Don Juan and General Crack, later opposing Rathbone in Romeo and Juliet. In the 40s Cornel Wilde became fencer in chief, in such films as Bandit of Sherwood Forest, Forever Amber and Sons of the Musketeers. All the versions of The Three Musketeers involved duelling, but Gene Kelly turned it into a splendid series of acrobatic feats. Paul Henreid duelled in The Spanish Main, Larry Parks in The Swordsman, Fredric March in The Buccaneer, Charlton Heston in El Cid, Louis Hayward in half a dozen low-budgeters. In more serious films Ferrer duelled in Cyrano de Bergerac and Olivier in Hamlet, and there was a pistol duel in the Russian War and Peace and the Italian Colpi di Pistola. The most recent major films to feature duels are Barry Lyndon, Royal Flash, The Mask of Zorro and the ultimate The Duellists.

The East Side Kids.

Set up in 1939 by Monogram as a Poverty Row challenge to the Dead End Kids, the original team consisted of Hally Chester, Harris Berger, Frankie Burke, Donald Hines, Eddie Brian and Sam Edwards. They were later joined by Bobby Jordan and Leo Gorcey from Dead End, and within a few years elements of both rival gangs were absorbed into the Bowery Boys.

El Santo.

Silver-masked Mexican wrestler who was a star of the ring and of more than 50 cheap, popular and profitable adventure movies in which he defeated crooks, monsters, vampires, werewolves and extra-terrestrials. He first appeared in films in Santo – El Enmascarado de Plata 52, but the series proper began in 1961 with Santo versus the Diabolic Brain and ended in 1982 with Santo versus the Television Assassin. It was probably not always the same actor behind the mask. Most often, it was Rodolfo Guzmán Huerta, but Eric del Castillo may have taken the role in some of the films. Occasionally El Santo was paired with a rival masked wrestler, Blue Demon (El Demonio Azul), played by Alejandro Cruz. In versions of the films dubbed into English, the character is sometimes renamed Samson.

the electric chair

has figured prominently in innumerable gangster and prison movies, notably Two Seconds, Twenty Thousand Years in Sing Sing, Angels with Dirty Faces and The Last Mile. Front Page Woman concentrated on the reporters ushered in to watch. The death cell scenes in Double Indemnity were deleted before the film's release. An executed killer uses electricity to return from the dead in the horror movie Shocker, while Dennis Quaid survives electrocution in Last Rites, due to a lucky lightning strike. The most horrific sequence of this kind was the gas chamber climax of I Want To Live, while the funniest comes at the climax of Robert Altman's The Player.

have come closest to starring roles in Zenobia, Elephant Boy and Hannibal Brooks; but they were the subject of concern in Chang, Where No Vultures Fly, Elephant Walk, Maya, Roots of Heaven, and Operation Dumbo Drop. Tarzan and Dorothy Lamour (in her jungle days) usually had one around as a pet, as did Brendan Fraser in George of the Jungle. (Tarzan Goes to India had a splendid elephant stampede.) The John Huston-like director in White Hunter, Black Heart was less interested in making a film in Africa than in shooting an elephant. In Larger Than Life, a penniless Bill Murray was faced with the problem of getting an inherited elephant across America.

Babar, in the animated Babar, King of Elephants introduced human ways and dress to his subjects. Circus elephants were stars of Jumbo, and above all of Dumbo.

Ellery Queen.
The fictional American detective was played by four actors between 1935 and 1943: Donald Cook, Eddie Quillan, Ralph Bellamy and William Gargan. The name is a pseudonym for two authors: Frederick Dannay (1905-82) and Manfred Lee (1905-71). In 1971 Peter Lawford turned up in a TV movie, Don't Look Behind You, and in 1975 there was a TV series with Jim Hutton, following a 1954 one with George Nader.

Elmer Fudd.
Warner Brother's cartoon star. An adversary of Bugs Bunny, Elmer is a constantly frustrated wabbit-hunter noted for his deer-stalker hat, double-barrelled shotgun, and his inability to pronounce the letter 'r'. He made his debut in 1939 in a Tex Avery cartoon.

Dangerous Dan McFoo 39. Wabbit Twouble 41. An Itch in Time 43. Hare Remover 46. Hare Do 49. Rabbit Fire 51. Rabbit Seasoning 52. Robot Rabbit 53. Hare Brush 55. Pre-Hysterical Hare 58. What's My Lion? 61, etc.

the end of the world has been fairly frequently considered in movies, and not only in panic button dramas like Dr Strangelove, The Bedford Incident and Fail Safe. Movement of the earth was threatened in The Day the Earth Stood Still and stopped (by Roland Young) in The Man Who Could Work Miracles. Plague very nearly ended everything in Things to Come. Danger from other planets looming perilously close was only narrowly averted in Red Planet Mars, while in When Worlds Collide and The Day the Earth Caught Fire the worst happened. Another kind of danger was met in Crack in the World. The Martians nearly got us in The War of the Worlds. In Five there were only five people left alive, in The World, the Flesh and the Devil only three, and in On the Beach none at all. The world was saved at the last moment from being pulverized by huge asteroids in two disaster movies of 1998, Deep Impact and Armageddon.

Enoch Arden was a character in a Tennyson poem who came back to his family after having been long supposed dead. Films with an 'Enoch Arden' theme include Tomorrow Is Forever (with Orson Welles), The Years Between (with Michael Redgrave), My Two Husbands (with Fred MacMurray) and its remake Three for the Show (with Jack Lemmon), My Favourite Wife (with Irene Dunne) and its remake Move Over Darling (with Doris Day), Piccadilly Incident (with Anna Neagle), Return from the Ashes (with Ingrid Thulin), Desire Me (with Robert Mitchum), Laura (with Gene Tierney), Man Alive (with Pat O'Brien), and The Man from Yesterday (with Clive Brook). D. W. Griffith in 1910 and 1911 made short versions of the original story.

including actors and impresarios, have frequently been the subject of biopics, and if all their stories have seemed much the same, that is Hollywood's fault rather than theirs. Here is a reasonably comprehensive list:

Always Leave Them Laughing Milton BERLE, After the Ball Pat KIRKWOOD as Vesta Tilley, Bound for Glory David CARRADINE as Woody Guthrie, The Buddy Holly Story Gary BUSEY, The Buster Keaton Story Donald O'CONNOR, Champagne Charlie Tommy TRINDER as George Leybourne and Stanley HOLLOWAY as the Great Vance, Chaplin Robert DOWNEY JNR as Charlie Chaplin, The Dolly Sisters Betty GRABLE & June HAVER, The Doors Val KILMER as Jim Morrison, The Eddie Cantor Story Keefe BRASSELLE, The Fabulous Dorseys Tommy and Jimmy DORSEY, *W.C. Movies made for TV include: Bud and Lou Buddy HACKETT and Harvey Korman as ABBOTT and COSTELLO, Elvis Kurt RUSSELL as PRESLEY, Elvis and Me Dale Midkiff as Elvis, James Dean Stephen MCHATTIE, The Jayne Mansfield Story Loni Anderson with Arnold SCHWARZENEGGER as Mickey HARGITAY, The Legend of Valentino Franco NERO, Liberace Andrew ROBINSON, Liberace: Behind the Music Victor Garber, Marilyn: The Untold Story Catherine Hicks as Monroe, Marilyn & Bobby: Her Final Affair Melody Anderson as Monroe, Norma Jean and Marilyn Mira SORVINO, Marilyn and Me Susan Griffiths as Monroe, Blonde Poppy Montgomery as Marilyn, Rainbow Andrea McArdle as the young Judy GARLAND, LIFE WITH JUDY GARLAND: ME AND MY SHADOWS with Judy DAVIS as Garland, Rita Hayworth: The Love Goddess Lynda CARTER, Sophia Loren: Her Own Story Sophia LOREN as herself and her mother, John Gavin as Cary Grant, Edmund PURDOM as Vittorio DE SICA, Madonna: Innocence Lost Terumi Matthews, James Dean: Race with Destiny Casper VAN DIEN, James Dean James FRANCO, Introducing Dororthy Dandridge with Halle BERRY and Klaus Maria BRANDAUER as Otto PREMINGER, William ATHERTON as Darryl ZANUCK, Benjamin Brown as Sidney POITIER, Kerri Randles as Marilyn MONROE, The Audrey Hepburn Story Jennifer Love HEWITT, Bojangles Gregory HINES as Bill ROBINSON,

featured memorably in Jezebel, Yellow Jack, Arrowsmith, The Rains Came, Forever Amber, Panic in the Streets, The Killer that Stalked New York, Elephant Walk No Blade of Grass, The Andromeda Strain, Eighty Thousand Suspects, The Omega Man, Things to Come, Isle of the Dead, The Satan Bug, The Seventh Seal and Outbreak.

episodic films in a sense have always been with us – If I Had a Million, after all, came out in 1932, and Intolerance in 1916 – but it was in the 40s, possibly spurred by the all-star variety films intended to help the war effort, that they achieved their greatest popularity. Julien Duvivier, who had made Un Carnet de Bal in Paris, remade it in Hollywood as Lydia and followed it with Tales of Manhattan which was linked by a tailcoat and Flesh and Fantasy which was linked by the ramblings of a club bore. The stories in Forever and a Day were held together by a house, Easy Money by football pools, Train of Events by a railway accident, Meet Mr Lucifer by television. Then came the author complex: Quartet (Somerset Maugham), Le Plaisir (Maupassant), Meet Me Tonight (Noël Coward). The French took over with films like The Seven Deadly Sins, The Devil and Ten Commandments, Life Together; and the Italians were at it with Four Kinds of Love, Made in Italy and The Queens. For English-speaking markets the form was killed in the mid-50s by the advent of the half-hour TV play, but the 60s saw a brief revival with How the West Was Won and The Yellow Rolls-Royce. The 80s showed signs: the Italians were at it again with Sunday Lovers and Hollywood assigned four directors to one story each for Twilight Zone.

epitaphs
Over the years, a few stars have been nudged by the press into composing their own epitaphs. Herewith a selection of this grave humour.

- W. C. Fields: On the whole, I'd rather be in Philadelphia.
- Cary Grant: He was lucky – and he knew it.
- Edward Everett Horton: A nice part – only four 'sides', but good company and in for a long run.
- Lionel Barrymore: Well, I've played everything but a harp.
- Hedy Lamarr: This is too deep for me.
- Dorothy Parker: Excuse my dust.
- Warner Baxter: Did you hear about my operation?
- William Haines: Here's something I want to get off my chest.
- Lewis Stone: A gentleman farmer goes back to the soil.
- Constance Bennett: Do not disturb.
- Wallace Ford: At last I get top billing.
- Preston Sturges:

  Now I've laid me down to die
  I pray my neighbours not to pry Too deeply into sins that I
  Not only cannot here deny
  But much enjoyed as time flew by...

Eskimos
have seldom been seriously tackled by the cinema. Documentaries abound, from Nanook of the North to Eskimo, and Ukaliq is a charming cartoon of Eskimo folklore, but the fictional stuff such as Savage Innocents and The White Dawn has been dull and unsympathetic. The most authentic in the 30s was probably Igloo 32, starring Ray MALA aka CheeAk, but it failed to attract audiences, as did the more recent Shadows of the Wolf/Agaguk 93. In 2001 Atanarjuat: The Fast Runner, based on an ancient fable, became the first film to be made in Inuktitut, the Inuit language, with a Inuit cast and a mainly Inuit crew.

from films are sometimes incorporated into other films in which characters go to a cinema or watch television. So in Hollywood Cavalcade Don Ameche watched a rough-cut of The Jazz Singer, just as ten years later Larry Parks in Jolson Sings Again watched a rough-cut of himself in The Jolson Story; an unidentified silent comedy was being played in the room below when the first murder took place in The Spiral Staircase; Linda Christian and Louis Jourdan saw Son of the Sheik at their local in The Happy Time, and Fredric March and his son watched a William S. Hart film in One Foot in Heaven. Prisoners watched Wings of the Navy during Each Dawn I Die and The Egg and I during Brute Force; and the chain gang in Sullivan's Travels roared with laughter at a Mickey Mouse cartoon. Footage from Phantom of the Opera was shown in Hollywood Story, from Comin' thru' the Rye in The Smallest Show on Earth, from Tol'able David in The Tingler, from Queen Kelly in Sunset Boulevard, from Camille in Bridge to the Sun, from Destination Tokyo in Operation Pacific, and from Boom Town in Watch the Birdie. Other movies shown in 'cinemas' in later films include: Uncle Tom's Cabin in Abbott and Costello Meet the Keystone Kops; Gold Diggers of 1933 in Bonnie and Clyde; Crossroads in The Youngest Profession; Casablanca in First to Fight; Red River in The Last Picture Show; Hell Divers in The Wings of Eagles; Task Force in White Heat; The Walking Dead in Ensign Pulver; Tin Pan Alley in Wing and a Prayer; Now Voyager in Summer of '42; Red Dust in Heavy Traffic; various Bogart films in Play It Again Sam; Caprice in Caprice (Doris Day went to the movies, saw herself on the screen, and didn't like it). In Two Weeks in Another Town, which had a plot pretty close to that of The Bad and the Beautiful, Kirk Douglas watched himself in – The Bad and the Beautiful! The Bette Davis character in Whatever Happened to Baby Jane? was criticized as a bad actress on the strength of clips from early Bette Davis movies, Ex-Lady and Parachute Jumper. In the same film Joan Crawford watched herself on TV in Sadie McKee; and in Walk Don't Run there was a flash of James Stewart dubbed in Japanese in Two Rode Together. Finally the cosmonauts on their space station in Conquest of Space were entertained by a showing of Here Come the Girls ... thus showing, as one critic remarked, that in 50 years' time TV will still be relying on old movies!

Other uses for old footage in new films include such gags as Bob Hope in Road to Bali meeting up with Humphrey Bogart in The African Queen; and economy dictates such measures as the ten-minute chunk of The Mummy at the beginning of The Mummy's Hand and the use in Singin' in the Rain, as part of a 'new' picture in production, of sequences from Gene Kelly's version of The Three Musketeers. Similarly bits of The Sheik were in Son of the Sheik, and Topper in Topper Takes a Trip. Great chunks of the Joan of Arc battles turned up in Thief of Damascus, as did The Black Knight in Siege of the Saxons and The Four Feathers in Storm Over the Nile and East of Sudan. Universal's Sword of Ali Baba used so much footage from their Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves that one actor had to be engaged to replay his original part! It was, however, wit rather than economy that persuaded Preston Sturges to open Mad Wednesday with the last reel of The Freshman and the Boris Karloff clips were central to the concept of Targets. As for Dead Men Don't Wear Plaid, the new footage was constructed entirely to fit in with clips from old movies, so that the hero appeared to be taking part in 40s scenes with the likes of Dorothy Lamour and Alan Ladd.

have inspired many documentaries but surprisingly few features except wholly fictitious ones like Trader Horn, She and The Lost World. Marco Polo has thrice been dealt with, and Christopher Columbus got the full Rank treatment in 1949, and two epic movies in 1992, Christopher Columbus: The Discovery and 1492: Conquest of Paradise. He also featured in the satirical Where Do We Go from Here? and the slapstick Carry On Columbus. The Pilgrim Fathers were the heroes of Plymouth Adventure, and Drake of Seven Seas to Calais. Lewis and Clark in The Far Horizons were played by Fred MACMURRAY and Charlton HESTON. Scott of the Antarctic was played by John MILLS, and by Martin SHAW in the TV movie The Last Place on Earth with Sverre Anker Ousdal as Amundsen. Sir Ernest Shackleton has been a TV favourite, being played by David SCHOFIELD in Shackleton 83, David Yelland in Wilderness Men and Kenneth BRANAGH in Shackleton 02. Amundsen was played by Sean CONNERY in The Red Tent; Pierre Radisson in Hudson's Bay by Paul MUNI; Cortez in Captain from Castile by César ROMERO; Pizarro in The Royal Hunt of the Sun by Robert SHAW; Junipero Serra in Seven Cities of Gold by Michael RENNIE. Penn of Pennsylvania and Stanley and Livingstone were in the practical sense explorers, though driven by other motives; Aguirre Wrath of God seemed to be driven chiefly by greed.

Fair Game.
Paula Gosling's thriller about a cop who uses a female witness as bait to catch a serial killer was filmed as Cobra in 1986, directed by George Pan COSMATOS and starring Sylvester STALLONE. The emphasis was on the cop. In 1995 it was remade under its original title, the emphasis now being on the woman, who was played by leading model Cindy CRAWFORD in her first film role. Neither movie enjoyed much critical or commercial success.

see FANTASY.

The Fall of the House of Usher.
This grisly tale by Edgar Allan Poe was filmed by Jean Epstein in 1928, by Americans Melville Webber and James Watson in the same year, by British semi-professionals in 1950, by Roger Corman in 1960, and by Allan Burkinshaw in 1988.

falling is, of all man's inherited fears, the one most spectacularly played on by Hollywood, where the shot of the villain's hand slipping away from the hero's frenzied grasp, followed by a quick-fading scream, has become a screen stereotype. Harold Lloyd's skyscraper comedies played on this fear, as have the films of many comedians since: in The Horn Blows at Midnight, for instance, Jack Benny is only one of six people hanging on to each other's coat-tails from the top of a high building. All circus films, and that includes The Marx Brothers at the Circus, base one or two of their thrills on trapeze acts that might go wrong. And whenever a villain starts climbing upwards, as Ted de Corsia did in Naked City, or along a ledge, as the same accident-prone Ted de Corsia did in The Enforcer, the audience grits its teeth and waits for the inevitable. The whole action of Fourteen Hours was based on the question whether a potential suicide would or would not jump from a ledge.

Some of the screen's most spectacular falls include Walter Abel's in Mirage, the key to the whole action; Agnes Moorehead's (through a window) in Dark Passage; Charlotte Henry's in Alice in Wonderland; Cedric Hardwicke's in Hunchback of Notre Dame; W. C. Fields' (from an aeroplane) in Never Give a Sucker an Even Break; Alan Ladd's (through a roof) in The Glass Key; Slim Pickens' (on the bomb) in Dr Strangelove; Eleanor Parker's in An American Dream; King Kong's (from the top of the Empire State Building); William Bendix's from a skyscraper in The Dark Corner. To Alfred Hitchcock, falls are a speciality: Edmund Gwenn fell from Westminister Cathedral in Foreign Correspondent, Norman Lloyd from the torch of the Statue of Liberty in Saboteur, while Vertigo not only boasted three falls but based its entire plot on the hero's fear of heights. Falls under trains and buses are legion, but in The Well a little girl fell down an old wellshaft, in The List of Adrian Messenger a victim fell to his death in a lift (as did characters in Hotel and House of Wax, while in Ivy Joan Fontaine fell down a lift shaft), in Somerset Maugham's Encore an acrobat hoped to fall safely into a water tank; and an unnamed gentleman was pushed out of The High Window by Florence Bates.

is the centre of most people's lives, so naturally there have been many memorable film families. Those popular enough to have warranted a series include the Joneses, the Hardys, the Huggetts, the Wilkinses of Dear Ruth, The Cohens and the Kellys, the Bumsteads of Blondie and the Four Daughters saga. World War II brought a sentimental attachment to the family which in Hollywood expressed itself in Happy Land, The Human Comedy, Our Town, The Happy Time, Since You Went Away, Meet Me in St Louis, A Genius in the Family, The Sullivans and The Best Years of Our Lives; in Britain, Salute John Citizen, The Holly and the Ivy, Dear Octopus, Quiet Wedding, This Man is Mine. Semi-classical treatments of the theme include Cavalcade, The Swiss Family Robinson, Pride and Prejudice, Little Women, Scrooge and Whiteoaks. Odd families, ranging from the merely sophisticated to the downright bizarre, were seen in Three Cornered Moon, The Old Dark House, The Royal Family of Broadway, My Man Godfrey, You Can't Take It With You, The Young in Heart, The Little Foxes, Tobacco Road, The Bank Dick, House of Strangers, An Inspector Calls, Sweethearts, Treasure Hunt, Holiday, The Philadelphia Story, The Anniversary, and The Lion in Winter. Vaudeville families were seen in Yankee Doodle Dandy, The Merry Monahans, The Seven Little Foys, The Buster Keaton Story and There's No Business Like Show Business. There has been a fashion for the large family, started by Cheaper by the Dozen and Chicken Every Sunday in 1949 and reprised by With Six You Get Egg Roll and Yours Mine and Ours in 1968 and a TV series The Brady Bunch in 1969, who made it to the big screen in the mid 90s. Other charming families have included those in Our Vines Have Tender Grapes, Background, The Happy Family, Four Sons, The Holly and the Ivy, Made in Heaven, 29 Acacia Avenue, Little Murders, Never Too Late, This Happy Breed and My Wife's Family; but the most memorable family of all is likely to remain the Joads in The Grapes of Wrath, unless it is one of the real families put under the microscope by American and British TV.

Fanny.

Originally one of Marcel Pagnol's 1932-34 trilogy (the others: Marius and César) about the Marseilles waterfront, this tale of a girl left pregnant by a sailor was almost unrecognizable in the MGM version Port of Seven Seas 38. The film was subsequently turned into a stage musical, and in 1960 Joshua Logan filmed this – but deleted the songs. The stars were Leslie Caron, Maurice Chevalier, and Charles Boyer.

fans

have been with us as long as the star system. One way of describing them is as people who adore an actor whatever he's doing and whether he's good or not. Another definition is: 'People who tell an actor he's not alone in the way he feels about himself.' Judy Garland once played a fan when she sang 'Dear Mr Gable'; and MGM made a whole movie about them, called The Youngest Profession. The Fan who pursued Lauren Bacall was quite another matter, a homicidal lunatic; and Eve in All About Eve was another fan who didn't do her star any good. The baseball fan in The Fan 96 became so upset that he kidnapped a player's son and threatened to murder him.

has always been a popular form of cinema entertainment because the camera can lie so well, and trick work is most easily used in an unrealistic or fanciful story. The early films of Méliès and his innumerable imitators set a high standard and were still popular when the sombre German classics of the 20s – The Golem, Nosferatu, Faust, Warning Shadows, The Niebelungen Saga, Metropolis – awakened filmgoers to the possibilities of the medium for sustaining impossible situations throughout a whole serious feature.

Although Ince's Civilisation showed Christ on the battlefields, and the 20s brought such films as The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse, The Lost World and The Sorrows of Satan, Hollywood did not fully explore the possibilities of fantasy until sound. Then in quick succession picturegoers were startled by Outward Bound, Dracula, Frankenstein, Berkeley Square, King Kong and The Invisible Man. The Scoundrel, with Noël Coward, was the forerunner of the few serious ghost films: The Uninvited, The Return of Peter Grimm, Earthbound, The Ghost and Mrs Muir, Portrait of Jennie, The Haunting, etc. Comic ghosts have, of course, been legion, notably in the Topper films, The Ghost Breakers, I Married a Witch, The Canterville Ghost, The Man in the Trunk, The Remarkable Andrew, Thirteen Ghosts, The Spirit Is Willing, Blackbeard's Ghost, Wonder Man, and so on. There were even singing ghosts in Maytime, Bitter Sweet and Carousel. Britain's contributions to the genre were few but choice: The Ghost Goes West, Blithe Spirit, Things to Come, The Man Who Could Work Miracles, A Matter of Life and Death, Dead of Night.

In 1936 Green Pastures showed the Negro view of heaven, and On Borrowed Time three years later paved the way for the heavenly comedies of the 40s: Here Comes Mr Jordan, That's the Spirit, A Guy Named Joe, Heaven Can Wait, Down to Earth, The Horn Blows at Midnight, You Never Can Tell, even Ziegfeld Follies (in which Ziegfeld's shade wrote in his diary 'Another heavenly day...'). For many years the last in this vein was Carousel 56; but 1968 brought Barbarella with its slightly tarnished angel, and The Adding Machine had its own perverse view of the hereafter. Meanwhile objects with magical properties were well served in Alf's Button Afloat, A Thousand and One Nights, The Thief of Baghdad, Turnabout and The Picture of Dorian Gray.

Among the many fairy tales filmed are The Bluebird, The Wizard of Oz, Alice in Wonderland, The Glass Slipper, Tom Thumb, Mary Poppins and a selection in Hans Christian Andersen and The Wonderful World of the Brothers Grimm. Disney's cartoon versions included Pinocchio, Dumbo, The Sleeping Beauty, Cinderella, Peter Pan, Beauty and the Beast and, of course, Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs, which was cannily adapted for grown-ups by Billy Wilder as Ball of Fire. Lost Horizon was a kind of grown-up fairy tale too; and The Red Shoes as shown was certainly not for children. Original fairy tales for both categories were The Luck of the Irish, with Cecil Kellaway as a leprechaun, and Miracle on 34th Street, with Edmund Gwenn as Santa Claus. Modern fairy tales adapted for the screen include: Chitty Chitty Bang Bang, Mary Poppins, Bedknobs and Broomsticks and Willy Wonka and the Chocolate Factory.

In France during the occupation Marcel Carné made Les Visiteurs du Soir, a medieval fantasy with allegorical overtones, and after the war poet Jean Cocteau once again turned his attention to the cinema with such results as La Belle et la Bête, Love Eternal, Orphée, and The Testament of Orphée. Albert Lamorisse produced fantasies like Crin Blanc and The Red Balloon and Jean-Marie Poiré brought a medieval knight and his squire into the modern world in Les Visiteurs (remade by Hollywood as Just Visiting) and Les Couloirs Du Temps: Les Visiteurs 2. Japan electrified the world with Rashomon and other strange, fanciful, stylized entertainments; Russia contributed many solidly-staged versions of old legends like Sadko and Epic Hero and the Beast/Ilya MurometS.

Since 1950, when in Hollywood Dick Powell played an Alsatian dog in You Never Can Tell and James Stewart in Harvey had a white rabbit six feet high which the script could never quite categorize as fact or hallucination, fantastic elements have been infiltrating into supposedly realistic films to such an extent that it is now difficult to separate them, especially in the films of Fellini, Antonioni, Tony Richardson, Richard Lester, Robert Altman and David Lynch.

was once called 'tragedy with its trousers down'. Like melodrama, it presents exaggerated accounts of things that might happen in life. Comedy is more plausible than farce, but farce is often more enjoyable, involving more happenings, more chases, more doors slamming, more misunderstandings and mistaken identities. Good farce must be played with great style, and no lapses are permitted until the curtain comes down. Major exponents in Britain have been the Aldwych team of Tom Walls, Ralph Lynn and Robertson Hare and the Whitehall team headed by Brian Rix. In Hollywood good farce has been more occasional, but one might highlight Nothing Sacred, To Be or Not to Be, Topper Returns, Love Crazy and The Palm Beach Story (or almost anything else by Preston Sturges, who so delighted in controlled disorder). France gave us Fernandel and Pierre Etaix. The real trouble with farce on film is that it needs an audience: watched cold, it can often seem merely silly, and great stage farces such as Feydeau's Hotel Paradiso don't really translate.

Farewell, My Lovely.

Raymond Chandler's thriller of private eye Philip Marlowe searching for the girlfriend of an ex-convict was first filmed as vehicle for George Sanders' suave detective The Falcon (based on a character created by Michael Arlen) in The Falcon Takes Over 42. It was more faithfully and successfully remade two years later as Murder, My Sweet/Farewell, My Lovely, starring Dick Powell. In 1975, Dick Richards made another good version with Robert Mitchum in the lead.

A Farewell to Arms.

Hemingway's tough-romantic anti-war novel has been filmed twice: in 1932 by Frank Borzage, with Gary Cooper and Helen Hayes, and in 1957 by Charles Vidor, with Rock Hudson and Jennifer Jones. Neither version was a triumph artistically, but the first proved more popular than the second, which was badly inflated by David O. Selznick into a pseudo-epic.

fashions were the basis of many a woman's film of the 30s: Roberta, Fashions of 1934, Vogues of 1938. Later attempts to recapture this interest had an air of déjà vu: Maytime in Mayfair, It Started in Paradise, Lucy Gallant, Designing Woman. But the wheel turns, and the 70s brought Mahogany, the 80s Chanel Solitaire and the 90s Ready to Wear/Prêt-à-Porter.

fastest money-making movies:

Spider-Man holds the record, taking three days to reach $114m in 2002, beating Star Wars: Episode III – Revenge of the Sith and Shrek 2 at $108m, Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire at $102m, Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban at $93m and The Matrix Reloaded at $91m. Shrek 2 holds the record for reaching $400m quickest, taking 43 days, beating Spider-Man and Titanic, which took 66 days.

Father Brown.

The only British attempt to film the adventures of G. K. Chesterton's tubby detective in 1958 was a civilized comedy with all concerned on the same wavelength. A quietly witty script by Thelma Schnee, polished direction by Robert Hamer, and high-comedy acting by Alec Guinness, Peter Finch, Joan Greenwood, and Ernest Thesiger made it a film with a rare flavour. On television, Kenneth More played the role in a 1974 series. In 1934 Walter Connolly played the role in a Hollywood second feature, Father Brown Detective. In West Germany, Heinz Ruhmann played the role in two 60s films, and Josef Meinrad in a 1969 TV series. In 1980 Barnard Hughes played the priest on TV in The Girl in the Park.

FBI.

The US governmental crime-fighting agency was set up in 1924 by J. Edgar Hoover and became famous for its heroic stand against the public enemies of the 30s, when its agents became known as G-Men. Surface glamour concealed an immensely painstaking organization relying heavily on science, but only the glamour was shown in such films as Show 'Em No Mercy, G-Men, Persons in Hiding, Let 'Em Have It, The FBI Story, FBI Girl, Parole Fixer, Confessions of a Nazi Spy, FBI Code 98, Walk East on Beacon and Queen of the Mob. The House on 92nd Street in 1945 gave the best impression of the FBI at work, but its sequel The Street with No Name reverted to stereotype, which was maintained by Quinn Martin's nine-year TV series. In 1978, The Private Files of J. Edgar Hoover provided a rather superficial exposé. More recently FBI agents have been shown as incompetent (Die Hard), devious (JFK) or merely providing the excuse for a romantic comedy (Miss Congeniality).

Felix (the Cat).

Cartoon creation of Pat Sullivan, a perky and indestructible character highly popular in the 20s; in the 50s revived for TV by other hands in more streamlined style. An unsuccessful full-length feature, directed by Tibor Hernadi, was released in 89.

fights

provide the climax to many a film, but only the outstandingly staged ones remain in the mind. The slugging match between the two heroes of The Spoilers became a tradition, as each of the five versions tried to outdo the previous one. John Wayne had many fighting triumphs, notably against Victor McLaglen in The Quiet Man; McLintock and North to Alaska seemed at times to have more brawling than dialogue. Spoof fights were probably topped by the saloon brawl in The Great Race; serious ones by the solemn allegorical punch-up in The Big Country. Other good western fights are found in Shane, The Sheepman, and (between Dietrich and Una Merkel) in Destry Rides Again. For viciousness within a serious picture the waterfront fights in Edge of the City and On the Waterfront take some beating. Bruce Lee, Jackie Chan and other athletic Chinese actors introduced some spectacular fighting techniques to the West in their films. By the 1990s these influenced fight sequences in such movies as The Matrix, choreographed by Yuen Woo-Ping, who also choreographed the spectacular hig-flying fights in Ang Lee's Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon 00.

is not too frequently used as a background for movies, as movies about movies are thought to be bad box office. Certainly not too many of the following were big hits: OK for Sound, The Best Pair of Legs in the Business, Go for a Take, The Comedy Man, The Bad and the Beautiful, Two Weeks in Another Town, It's a Great Feeling, Shooting Stars, Pick a Star, A Star is Born, The Carpetbaggers, Eight and a Half, Hellzapoppin, Day for Night, Stand In, Singin' In The Rain, Abbott and Costello Meet the Keystone Kops, Gable and Lombard, Harlow, W.C. Fields and Me, The Big Knife, Once in a Lifetime, Wonderful Life, Hollywood Cavalcade, Hollywood Boulevard, Hollywood Story, Nickelodeon, The Last Tycoon, Everything for Sale, The Stunt Man, Crimes and Misdemeanors, The Big Picture, The Player, Living in Oblivion, Swimming with Sharks, Cecil B. Demented, State and Main.

films à clef

are those which appear to be fiction but are really based on factual cases with the names changed. The obvious example is Citizen Kane, which parallels the career of William Randolph Hearst. Others are The Great Dictator, in which Hynkel is obviously Hitler; Compulsion, Rope, and Swoon, based on the Leopold and Loeb murder; Inherit the Wind, about the Scopes monkey trial; The Moon and Sixpence, in which Charles Strickland stands in for Paul Gauguin; The Man Who Came to Dinner, in which Sheridan Whiteside is Alexander Woollcott, Banjo is Harpo Marx, and Beverly Carlton is Noël Coward; Young Cassidy, drawn from the early life of Sean O'Casey; All About Eve, in which Margo Channing was said to be Tallulah Bankhead and Addison de Witt George Jean Nathan; Twentieth Century, in which Oscar Jaffe is an amalgam of Jed Harris and David Belasco; All the King's Men and A Lion is in the Streets, both essentially about Huey Long; The Lost Moment, in which the old lady is allegedly Claire Clairemont, the aged mistress of Byron; The Adventurers, in which the characters are supposedly based on Porfirio Rubirosa, Barbara Hutton, Aristotle Onassis and Maria Callas; The Carpetbaggers, plainly about Howard Hughes; Little Caesar, who was clearly Al Capone; Major Barbara, in which Adolphus Cusins was Gilbert Murray; Call Me Madam, based on the exploits of Perle Mesta; The Winslow Boy, based on the Archer-Shee case, with Sir Robert Morton standing in for Sir Edward Carson; An American Tragedy, from the real life Chester Gillette murder case; Monsieur Verdoux, who was Landru; Death of a Scoundrel, from the career of Charles Rubenstein; The Prisoner, inspired by the sufferings of Cardinal Mindzenty; Fame is the Spur, in which Homer Radshaw was Ramsay MacDonald; and if you like, Dr Jekyll and Mr Hyde, whose story was inspired by the burglarious second life of Deacon William Brodie; or even any Sherlock Holmes story, as Holmes was modelled on Dr Joseph Bell. Where Love Has Gone was modelled on the Lana Turner case in which her daughter murdered her lover; and Imitation of Life also reflected the Turner career, as Dancing Lady and Torch Song reflected Joan Crawford's. The Barefoot Contessa was vaguely drawn from Rita Hayworth's international goings-on, though the star who played her, Ava Gardner, was also no slouch in the fun department. Bombshell was an obvious echo of Jean Harlow's own troubles with hangers-on. I Could Go on Singing featured Judy Garland clearly playing herself; The Devil Is a Woman can be seen as Sternberg's farewell to Dietrich (with Lionel Atwill playing himself), just as Orson Welles cast himself as bedevilled by his then wife Rita Hayworth in The Lady from Shanghai. The leading roles in Will Success Spoil Rock Hunter?, After the Fox, The Band Wagon, Blondie of the Follies and Kiss Me Stupid were clearly based on those who played them: Jayne Mansfield, Victor Mature, Fred Astaire, Marion Davies and Dean Martin. The same can be said of Gloria Swanson in Sunset Boulevard, Bette Davis in The Star, Errol Flynn in The Sun Also Rises, Hedy Lamarr in The Female Animal, Marlene Dietrich in No Highway, John Wayne in The Shootist, John Barrymore in The Great Profile and Zero Mostel in The Front. The Goddess reflected Marilyn Monroe's marriage with Joe Di Maggio. Flight for Freedom, though not using Amelia Earhart's name, gave a fictional solution to the aviatrix's real-life disappearance. Funny Girl was the official biography of Fanny Brice, but Rose of Washington Square also had lots of similarities. All About Eve's leading character, Margo Channing, according to its creator, was based on Elisabeth Bergner. New York New York seemed to be taken from Doris Day's autobiography. Smash-Up was allegedly based on the drinking problems of Bing Crosby's first wife Dixie Lee, just as Written on the Wind had connections with the suicide of Libby Holman's first husband. Evangelist Aimee Semple McPherson was clearly impersonated by Barbara Stanwyck in The Miracle Woman and by Jean Simmons in Elmer Gantry. Columnist Walter Winchell was parodied in several Lee Tracy vehicles – Tracy even looked like him – and also by Burt Lancaster in Sweet Smell of Success. The Robert Ryan character in Caught was allegedly based on Howard Hughes. Bette Midler in The Rose is obviously Janis Joplin. The Greek Tycoon is clearly inspired by Aristotle Onassis and Jackie Kennedy. In It's Tough to Be Famous, Douglas Fairbanks Jnr could only be Charles Lindbergh. James Cagney and Pat O'Brien in Boy Meets Girl were inspired by Charles MacArthur and Ben Hecht. In The Last Tycoon, Robert de Niro was Irving Thalberg. Anne Baxter in You're My Everything was Clara Bow. The sliding marriage in A Star Is Born could have been based on Al Jolson and Ruby Keeler, or on John Gilbert and Greta Garbo. Patty Duke in Valley of the Dolls was Judy Garland. And so on.

Final Destination

was a clever horror movie, directed in 2000 by James Wong, about a group of teenagers who cheat death by deciding not to board a plane that later crashes; but then Death tracks them down and kills them one by one. The formula was then repeated in Final Destination 2 in 2003, about teens who avoid dying in a road crash and are then killed one after the other. A third film in 2006 had teens avoiding death in a roller coaster disaster, but by then the ride had run out of thrills.

fire

is a standard part of the melodramatist's equipment, whether it be used for disposing of country houses with too many memories (Dragonwyck, Rebecca, The Lost Moment, The Fall of the House of Usher, The Tomb of Ligeia, Gone with the Wind) or whole cities (Forever Amber, In Old Chicago, Quo Vadis, City on Fire). Sometimes, as in House of Wax, it makes a splendid starting point; though to judge from She one can't rely on its life-prolonging qualities. Its use in realistic films is rare, though cases of arson were seriously studied in On the Night of the Fire and Violent Playground. The fires of hell were most spectacularly recreated in the 1935 version of Dante's Inferno. Comedies about firemen include Where's That Fire? (Will Hay), Fireman Save My Child, Harvey Middleman Fireman, and Go to Blazes (Dave King); and firemen who start fires instead of putting them out are prophesied in Fahrenheit 451. Oil fires were spectacularly depicted in Tulsa, Wildcat, and Hellfighters. The classic study of conventional firemen remains Fires Were Started; TV series which took up the theme include Emergency, Firehouse and London's Burning. For many, the greatest screen fire will be the burning of Atlanta in Gone with the Wind, but The Towering Inferno was probably the most spectacular. Backdraft is another where the flames stole the picture. Endless Love was brought to an end by a pyromaniac, Firestarter dealt with a psychic who could set anything ablaze, while Quest for Fire dealt with a Stone Age tribe who weren't able to set anything alight after their fire went out. Finally, fire was always a splendid aid for serial producers, as the oft-used title 'Next Week: Through the Flames' may suggest.

firing squads

have figured chiefly in films about World War I (Paths of Glory, King and Country) or those telling the lives of spies (Mata Hari, Nurse Edith Cavell, Carve Her Name With Pride). Other uses have been in Dishonoured, The Fugitive, Custer of the West, The Victors, The Long Ride Home, Reach for Glory, The Counterfeit Traitor and The Ceremony; and firing squads were given a comic effect in The Captain's Paradise, Casino Royale, Morgan and The Ambushers.

The Flag Lieutenant.

The stiff-upper-lip stage melodrama by W. P. Drury and Lee Trevor, about the intrepid exploits of a naval officer in an outpost of empire, was filmed as a silent in 1919 with George Wynn, and in 1926 with Henry Edwards. In 1932 Edwards appeared in a sound remake with Anna Neagle as his leading lady.

Flash Gordon.

American newspaper strip hero whose exploits were featured in three famous Hollywood serials starring Buster Crabbe. In the original Flash Gordon 36 our hero and his friends saved the Earth from collision with another planet at the cost of being stranded there at the mercy of the wicked Emperor Ming. Flash Gordon's Trip to Mars 38 and Flash Gordon Conquers the Universe 40 were compounded of similar elements. The directors respectively were Frederick Stephani; Ford Beebe and Robert Hill; and Ray Taylor. A softcore spoof, Flesh Gordon, appeared in 1974. In 1980 Dino de Laurentiis presented a lavish but empty remake of the original, and in the following year came a cartoon remake from Filmation.

The Flight of the Phoenix

Robert Aldrich directed this adventure story in 1966, based a novel by Elleston Trevor, about a group of survivors of a plane crash in the Sahara desert who attempt to escape by building a another plane from the wreckage. Its cast was headed by James Stewart, who was backed up by some excellent character actors: Richard Attenborough, Peter Finch, Hardy Kruger, Ian Bannen and Ernest Borgnine. A remake in 2004 set the crash in the Gobi desert and had a less distinguished cast going through the familiar motions: Dennis Quaid, Giovanni Ribisi, Tyrese Gibson, Tony Curran and Miranda Otto. It was also a less interesting movie.

The Flintstones.

An animated TV suburban situation comedy set in the Stone Age, created by Bill Hanna and Joe Barbera, was more recently turned into two live-action feature films. In the cartoon version, Fred Flintstone was voiced by Alan Reed, his wife Wilma by Jean Vanderpyl, and their pet dinosaur, Dino, by Mel Blanc, who also supplied the voice for their neighbour Barney Rubble. Broadcast from 1960-66 and often repeated, it owed much to an earlier TV sitcom, The Honeymooners, starring Jackie Gleason, and became the longest-running animated show on television; its spin-offs included The Flintstone Kids, broadcast in the late 80s. In the feature film The Flinstones 94, John Goodman appeared as Fred, Rosie O'Donnell as Wilma, and Rick Moranis as Barney. A sequel, The Flintstones in Viva Rock Vegas 00, had Mark Addy as Fred, Kristen Johnson as Wilma, and Stephen Baldwin as Barney.

has been a godsend to many a cinematic entertainment, whether it's the genuine pea-souper inseparable from Hollywood's idea of London, or the ankle-high white mist which used to distinguish heaven and dream sequences. Fog can provide a splendid dramatic background, especially in horror-thrillers like Dracula, The Wolf Man and The Cat and the Canary; but too often it is simply imposed on a film to force a particular atmosphere, as in Footsteps in the Fog, Fog over Frisco, Fog Island, Winterset, Out of the Fog and The Notorious Landlady. Barbary Coast seemed to be permanently enveloped in fog, as did the village in Sherlock Holmes and the Scarlet Claw: while in The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes London had fog in May! Fog was dramatically used in The VIPs and The Divorce of Lady X (for bringing people together in a hotel); in The Runaway Bus (for bringing people together in an abandoned village); in Midnight Lace (for masking the identity of the voice threatening Doris Day); in Twenty-Three Paces to Baker Street (for hampering the villain but not the blind hero); in Alias Nick Beal (as a background for the devil's materialization); in The Lost Continent (as a nauseous yellow background for the weird community); in Random Harvest (as a means for the hero's escape); and in the various versions of The Sea Wolf (for causing the accident that brings hero and heroine together on Wolf Larsen's boat). Even comedies find it useful: the chase through fog in After the Fox results in happy confusion. Oddly enough John Carpenter's film The Fog made insufficient use of its titular commodity, unlike its remake in 2005.

Foghorn Leghorn.

Boastful rooster from the Deep South, a star of Warner Brothers' Merrie Melodies and Looney Tunes cartoons. His voice was supplied by Mel Blanc.

Walky Talky Hawky (AAN) 46. The Foghorn Leghorn 48. Leghorn Swoggled 51. All Fowled Up 55. The High and the Flighty 56. Fox Terror 57. A Broken Leghorn 59. Strangled Eggs 61. Banty Raids 63, etc.

Folies Bergère.

This innocuous 1935 musical comedy was written by Bess Meredyth and Hal Long as a vehicle for Maurice Chevalier, who played a dual role; at the climax his double had to masquerade to his wife as himself. It was too good an idea not to be used again. In 1941 came That Night in Rio with Don Ameche; in 1951, there was On the Riviera with Danny Kaye. Kaye apparently liked it so much that he had it altered a little and it served for On the Double 61 as well.

the Foreign Legion has been taken reasonably seriously in the three versions of Beau Geste, the two versions of Le Grand Jeu, Beau Sabreur, China Gate, Rogue's Regiment, Ten Tall Men, and The Legion's Last Patrol. It was sent up something wicked by Laurel and Hardy in Beau Hunks and The Flying Deuces; by Abbott and Costello In the Foreign Legion; and by the Carry On gang in Follow That Camel, and treated very seriously by Claire Denis in the obsessive Beau Travail 99.

forest fires have made a roaring climax for many films including The Blazing Forest, Red Skies of Montana, Guns of the Timberland, The Bluebird, The Big Trees and Ring of Fire. None was more dramatic than the cartoon version in Bambi.

The Fox.

Name of an actor-detective played by Red Skelton in three films directed by S. Sylvan Simon. He plays an actor who plays The Fox, hero of a radio series, and finds himself called upon to solve crimes in the real world. The character Skelton plays resembles that projected by Bob Hope in many of his films of the period – a wisecracking coward who nevertheless comes good and gets the girl (played in Skelton's films by Ann Sothern).

Whistling in the Dark 41. Whistling in Dixie 42. Whistling in Brooklyn 43.

Fox and the Crow.

Stars of Columbia Pictures' (1941-47) and UPA's (1948-50) cartoons. Created by Frank Tashlin, Fox was voiced by Frank Graham and Crow by Paul Frees.

The Fox and the Grapes 41. Woodman Spare That Tree 42. Slay It with Flowers 43. The Dream Kids 44. Treasure Jest 45. Tooth or Consequences 47. Robin Hoodlum (AAN) 48. Magic Fluke (AAN) 49. Punchy De Leon 50, etc.

Francis.

The talking mule of several Universal comedies (1950-56) was the direct ancestor of TV's talking palomino Mister Ed, also produced by Arthur Lubin. Francis' first master was Donald O'Connor, but later Mickey Rooney took over the reins. Francis was 'voiced' by Chill Wills, Ed by Allan Lane.

Frankenstein.

The man/monster theme was explored in American movies of 1908 (with Charles Ogle) and 1916 (Life Without Soul); also in Italy in 1920 (Master of Frankenstein). The 1931 Hollywood film, written by Robert Florey and directed by James Whale, borrowed as much from Wegener's The Golem 22 as from Mary Shelley's early 19th-century novel; but despite censorship problems the elements jelled, with Boris Karloff a great success as the monster composed from dead bits and pieces, and a legend was born. Sequels included Bride of Frankenstein 35. Son of Frankenstein 39. Ghost of Frankenstein 41. Frankenstein Meets the Wolf Man 43. House of Frankenstein 45. House of Dracula 45. Abbott and Costello Meet Frankenstein 48; among those who took over from Karloff were Lon Chaney, Bela Lugosi and Glenn Strange. In 1956 the original story was remade in Britain's Hammer Studios under the title The Curse of Frankenstein; colour and gore were added, and sequels, with various monsters, came thick and fast: The Revenge of Frankenstein 58. The Evil of Frankenstein 63. Frankenstein Created Woman 67. Frankenstein Must Be Destroyed 69. Horror of Frankenstein 70. Frankenstein and the Monster from Hell 73. A variation on the original monster make-up was used by Fred Gwynne in the TV comedy series, The Munsters 64-65. There have also been several recent American, Japanese and Italian attempts to cash in on the name of Frankenstein in cheap exploitation pictures: I Was ■ Teenage Frankenstein 57. Frankenstein 1970 58. Frankenstein Versus the Space Monsters 65. Frankenstein Conquers the World 68. Lady Frankenstein 70, etc. In 1973 a four-hour TV version called Frankenstein: The True Story (which it could scarcely be) was co-authored by Christopher Isherwood but proved merely a laborious reworking of the earlier films, with occasional references back to the book, but no humour. Films about Mary Shelley's creation of Frankenstein appeared towards the end of the 80s: Haunted Summer, Gothic and Frankenstein Unbound, and Mary Shelley's Frankenstein, directed by Kenneth Branagh with Robert De Niro as the monster, appeared in 1994.

Book: 1994, The Illustrated Frankenstein Movie Guide by Stephen Jones.

Friday the 13th.

A series of low-budget horror movies about serial killer Jason Vorhees, who wears a hockey mask and, in the style of such films, murders teenagers. The first, produced and directed by Sean S. Cunningham, became a cult hit among young audiences and was turned into a computer game. The later films were low on quality and inspiration. In 1995 there were plans to team Jason and New Line's other horror creation, Freddy Kruger (of Nightmare on Elm Street), together in a film.

Fritz the Cat.

Randy feline, created by cartoonist Robert Crumb, who appeared in various magazines of the 60s and was the star of two animated adult features:

Fritz the Cat 72. The Nine Lives of Fritz the Cat 74.

The Front Page.
Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur's indestructible, fast-moving, witty and cynical play about journalists and politicians has been filmed four times: in 1931, directed by Lewis Milestone with Pat O'Brien as reporter Hildy Johnson and Adolphe Menjou as editor Walter Burns; in 1940, as the superlative His Girl Friday, directed by Howard Hawks, with Rosalind Russell as Hildy and Cary Grant as Burns; in 1974, directed by Billy Wilder, with Jack Lemmon as Hildy and Walter Matthau as Burns; and in 1988, as Switching Channels, directed by Ted Kotcheff, with Kathleen Turner and Burt Reynolds. Hecht thought the best performance of Hildy was by Lee Tracy in the original 1928 Broadway production, in which Osgood Perkins also triumphed as Walter Burns.

Fu Manchu.
Sax Rohmer's oriental master-criminal was played by Harry Agar Lyons in a series of British two-reelers in the 20s. Warner Oland played him in The Mysterious Fu Manchu 29, The Return of Fu Manchu 30 and Daughter of the Dragon 31; Boris Karloff in Mask of Fu Manchu 32, and Henry Brandon in Drums of Fu Manchu 41. Otherwise he was oddly neglected until the 60s series starring Christopher Lee, beginning with The Face of Fu Manchu 65 and Brides of Fu Manchu 66: it degenerated into shambling nonsense. Peter Sellers took the role in a lamentable spoof, The Fiendish Plot of Dr Fu Manchu, 79.

provided a starting point for The Third Man, Frankenstein, The Great Man, Death of a Salesman, The Bad and the Beautiful, Citizen Kane, and Keeper of the Flame; figured largely in The Premature Burial, The Mummy, The Egyptian, The Fall of the House of Usher, The Counterfeit Traitor, Funeral in Berlin, The Godfather, The Glass Key, I Bury the Living, Miracle in Milan, Doctor Zhivago and Hamlet; and formed a climax for Our Town and Four Weddings and a Funeral. In Vampyr and Wild Strawberries the hero dreamed of his own funeral; and in Holy Matrimony Monty Woolley attended his own funeral, having arranged to have his valet's body mistaken for his. Funerals were taken lightly in I See a Dark Stranger, Little Caesar, Kind Hearts and Coronets, Too Many Crooks, A Comedy of Terrors, Charade, The Wrong Box, I Love You Alice B. Toklas, Robin and the Seven Hoods, Monsieur Hulot's Holiday, Entr'acte, Ocean's Eleven, Comrade X, What a Way to Go, The Private Life of Sherlock Holmes, and above all The Loved One. One of the funniest, and touching, moments came in Orphans 99, with Gary Lewis bent ever-more double as he insists on carrying his mother's coffin on his own.

have provided fascinating settings for many a bravura film sequence. The Wagons Roll at Night, Nightmare Alley, Dante's Inferno, Rollercoaster and The Ring were set almost entirely on fairgrounds. Tawdry or 'realistic' funfairs were shown in Jeanne Eagels, Saturday Night and Sunday Morning, East of Eden, Picnic, and Inside Daisy Clover; glamorized or sentimentalized ones cropped up in The Wolf Man, My Girl Tisa, State Fair, Roseanna McCoy, The Great Ziegfeld and Mr and Mrs Smith. Musicals like On the Town, On the Avenue, Coney Island, Centennial Summer, State Fair and Down to Earth had funfair sequences and they are also used to excellent advantage in thrillers:

Brighton Rock, Spider Woman, Horrors of the Black Museum, Gorilla at Large, The Third Man, Lady from Shanghai, Strangers on a Train. Naturally funfairs are also marvellous places for fun: though not for Eddie Cantor in Strike Me Pink, Tony Curtis in Forty Pounds of Trouble, Laurel and Hardy in The Dancing Masters, or Bob Hope (fired from a cannon) in Road to Zanzibar. The Beast from 20,000 Fathoms was finally cornered in a funfair; Dr Caligari kept his cabinet in one. The star who made the most of a funfair sequence was undoubtedly Mae West as the carnival dancer in I'm No Angel, in which she delivered her famous line: 'Suckers!'

in the indoor sport sense, is quite a preoccupation of film-makers. Gregory Peck in The Great Sinner played a man who made a great career of it, as did James Caan in The Gambler and George Segal in California Split; while in The Queen of Spades Edith Evans learnt the secret of winning at cards from the devil himself. Other suspenseful card games were played in The Cincinnati Kid, Lucky Jordan, The Lady Eve, Hazard, Big Hand for a Little Lady, The Music of Chance and Lock, Stock and Two Smoking Barrels; snooker pool was the game in The Hustler and The Color of Money; old-time Mississippi river-boats were the setting for Mississippi Gambler, The Naughty Nineties, Frankie and Johnny and a sequence in The Secret Life of Walter Mitty. Roulette, however, is the most spectacular and oft-used film gambling game, seen in The Shanghai Gesture, Robin and the Seven Hoods, Ocean's Eleven, The Big Snatch, Doctor No, La Baie des Anges, Quartet (the 'Facts of Life' sequence), Seven Thieves, The Las Vegas Story, The Only Game in Town, The Big Sleep, Gilda, Kaleidoscope, and many others. Second features with such titles as Gambling House, Gambling Ship and Gambling on the High Seas were especially popular in the 40s. Musically, the filmic high-point was undoubtedly the 'oldest established permanent floating crap game in New York' number in Guys and Dolls. This stemmed from the writings of Damon Runyon, also adapted in such films as Sorrowful Jones and The Lemon Drop Kid. The most comic game on film was perhaps the hand of poker played between Judy Holliday and Broderick Crawford in Born Yesterday.

a real-life American menace of the 20s, provided a new kind of excitement for early talkies like Little Caesar and Public Enemy, which told how their heroes got into criminal activities but didn't rub in the moral very hard. The pace of the action, however, made them excellent movies, and critics defended them against religious pressure groups. Quick Millions, Scarface, Lady Killer, The Little Giant and Public Enemy's Wife were among the titles which followed; then Warner Brothers cleverly devised a way of keeping their thrills while mollifying the protesters: they made the policeman into the hero, in films like G-Men, I Am the Law, Bullets or Ballots. By 1938 it seemed time to send up the whole genre in A Slight Case of Murder, with its cast of corpses, and in the later Brother Orchid the gangster-in-chief became a monk; yet in 1939 the heat had cooled off sufficiently to allow production of The Roaring Twenties, one of the most violent gangster movies of them all. The war made gangsters old-fashioned, but in the late 40s Cagney starred in two real psychopathic toughies, White Heat and Kiss Tomorrow Goodbye. After that the fashion was to parody gangsterism, in Party Girl, Some Like It Hot, and a couple of Runyon movies; but the success of a French film called Rififi and a TV series called The Untouchables left the field wide open for redevelopment. Successes in the 60s included Bonnie and Clyde, The St Valentine's Day Massacre, Pay or Die, The Rise and Fall of Legs Diamond, King of the Roaring Twenties, and from the French Borsalino and various Rififi sequels. The 70s brought British gang violence in Get Carter, Villain, The Squeeze and Sweeney, and in 1972 the gigantic success of The Godfather spawned sequels, rivals (The Valachi Papers) and parodies (The Gang That Couldn't Shoot Straight). Britain showed that it could make gangster movies in the American style with The Long Good Friday, but there were few successors, although The Krays followed the fortunes of its most notorious criminals. Alan Parker's Bugsy Malone parodied the Chicago gangster movies by having one acted by kids armed with pop guns, but the era continued to fascinate film-makers. Sergio Leone's epic Once Upon a Time in America, hacked about by its producers on its first release, became available on video-cassette in an uncut version. Brian De Palma remade Scarface as a film about Hispanic gangsters and turned The Untouchables into a big-screen success. Coppola's examination of the Mafia was extended into The Godfather II and III, while Marlon Brando parodied his title role in The Freshman. Martin Scorsese had a hit with GoodFellas and went back to the 19th century to show the violence of the past in his epic Gangs of New York. Shakespeare's Macbeth was turned into a gangland movie in Men of Respect. Jonathan Demme found some humour in the subject of a Mafia widow fleeing the gangs in Married to the Mob. In the 90s, the hot subject became the gangs' involvement in drug-dealing. Abel Ferrera's The King of New York traced the rise of a white drug baron and his black confederates taking over from the Mafia, while New Jack City showed a gang turning an apartment block into a fortified drug factory. It was almost a relief to return to the simpler antics of the 50s in Bill Duke's A Rage in Harlem. In the late 90s British directors turned to crime in numbers, led by Guy Ritchie with Lock, Stock and Two Smoking Barrels and Snatch. But there was also The Criminal, Gangster No 1, Essex Boys, Sexy Beast, Love, Honour and Obey, Circus, and Going Off Big Time. The best was John Boorman's The General, based on the life of Dublin gangster Martin Cahill, who also inspired Ordinary Decent Criminal. In America, the Mafia found itself the subject of psychoanalysis in Analyze This, Analyze That and, especially, the much-praised TV series The Sopranos.

The Garden of Allah.
Robert Hichen's novel, about a sophisticated woman whose husband turns out to be an escaped Trappist monk, was filmed as a silent in 1917, with Tom Santschi and Helen Ware, and again in 1927 with Ivan Petrovich and Alice Terry. The 1936 sound remake had excellent early colour, elegant direction by Richard Boleslawski, and exotic performances from Charles Boyer and Marlene Dietrich.

Gaslight.
Patrick Hamilton's stage suspense thriller, about a Victorian wife deliberately being driven insane by her murderous husband, was perfectly filmed in Britain in 1940 by Thorold Dickinson with Anton Walbrook, Diana Wynyard, and Frank Pettingell. MGM promptly bought and destroyed the negative, and in 1944 produced an opulent and inferior remake with Charles Boyer, Ingrid Bergman (AA), and Joseph Cotten, directed by George Cukor. In Britain this version was known as The Murder in Thornton Square; prints of the original did survive and have been shown in America as Angel Street.

Gentlemen Prefer Blondes.
Anita Loos's comic novel about a gold-digging 20s chorus girl on the make in the millionaire set was filmed in 1928 by Mal St Clair, with Ruth Taylor and Alice White, then in 1953 by Howard Hawks with Marilyn Monroe and Jane Russell. Hawks's film was followed in 1955 by a sequel of sorts, Gentlemen Marry Brunettes, directed by Richard Sale and starring Jane Russell and Jeanne Crain.

George of the Jungle was a blundering apeman created by Jay Ward, which ran as a TV cartoon series 67-70. It lost money for its creator, but the character was turned into a successful live-action film in 1997, starring Brendan Fraser in the title-role. Fraser went on to play another character created by Ward in Dudley Do-Right 99.

Gerald McBoing Boing.
A smiling little boy who could only make sounds, created by author Dr Seuss and the hero of four UPA cartoons. The spareness of line and sharpness of wit, particularly in the first of the series, contrasted happily with Disney's chocolate-box period.

Gerald McBoing Boing (AA) 51. Gerald McBoing Boing's Symphony 53. How Now Boing Boing 54. Gerald McBoing Boing on the Planet Moo (AA) 56.

Gertie the Dinosaur.
Early American cartoon character created by Winsor McKay in 1909.

The Ghost Breaker.
This American stage thriller by Paul Dickey and Charles W. Goddard, about an heiress's voodoo-haunted castle, was filmed in 1915 with H. B. Warner and in 1922, directed by Alfred E. Green, with Wallace Reid. In 1940 George Marshall directed a talkie version as a vehicle for Bob Hope, and the result was an oddly successful combination of laughs and horror, with contributions from Willie Best, Paulette Goddard and Paul Lukas. (The title, incidentally, was made plural.) In 1953 Marshall remade it, with remarkable fidelity to the 1940 script, as a vehicle for Dean Martin and Jerry Lewis under the title Scared Stiff, with Lizabeth Scott and Carmen Miranda; the results were hardly stimulating.

The Ghost Train.
This hugely successful British stage comedy-thriller by Arnold Ridley (also an actor best known for playing Private Godfrey in the long-running television series Dad's Army), about stranded passengers at a lonely Cornish station being used by gun-runners, was first filmed in 1928, directed by Geza Bolvary, with Guy Newall as the silly-ass hero who turns out to be a policeman. A talkie version followed in 1931 with Jack Hulbert, directed by Walter Forde, who also directed the 1941 remake in which the leading role was split between Arthur Askey and Richard Murdoch.

see fantasy.

are infrequently encountered in films, but Harold Lloyd met one in Why Worry?, as did Abbott and Costello in Lost in a Harem. Costello also met The Thirty Foot Bride of Candy Rock, not to be confused with The Attack of the Fifty Foot Woman. Then there was The Giant of Marathon, and Glenn Langan played The Amazing Colossal Man in two films. Back to Abbott and Costello again: it was they who appeared with Buddy Baer in Jack and the Beanstalk. The lofty Romanian-born basketball player Gheorghe Muresan played the the title role in My Giant 98.

Gidget.
An American teenager of the early 60s, a kind of female Andy Hardy. The first film was released in 1959 and starred Sandra Dee. Then in 1961 came Gidget Goes Hawaiian with Deborah Walley, and in 1963 Gidget Goes to Rome with Cindy Carol. In 1969 and 1971 there were TV movies called Gidget Grows Up with Karen Valentine, and Gidget Gets Married with Monie Ellis; in 1972 came a cartoon version, Gidget Makes the Wrong Connection. In 1965 there was also a TV series with Sally Field.

are figures from another age, when women could be imposed on, but they were memorably played by David Niven in Dodsworth, Montgomery Clift in The Heiress, Fred MacMurray in The Lady is Willing, Burt Lancaster in Sorry Wrong Number, William Holden in Sunset Boulevard, Van Johnson in Invitation, Bekim Fehmiu in The Adventurers, Jon Voight in Midnight Cowboy, Charles Grodin in The Heartbreak Kid, Helmut Berger in Ash Wednesday, David Bowie in Just a Gigolo and Richard Gere in American Gigolo. The genre was mocked by the scrawny, accident-prone Rob Schneider in Deuce Bigalow: Male Gigolo 99 and Deuce Bigalow: European Gigolo 05.

There are those who would classify such developments as 3-D, CinemaScope and even talkies under this heading. The genuine gimmick however is a more fleeting affair, a momentary method for getting audiences into cinemas for reasons that have little to do with the quality of the film. William Castle is the established master. For Macabre he offered free insurance if one died of heart failure. For Homicidal, a fright break before the climax when cowards could leave – and even get their money back if they could stand to go home without learning the awful secret. For The House on Haunted Hill, 'Emergo', in which a skeleton on wires shot above the audience's head at a suitable point in the film. For The Tingler, a device which wired up certain seats to give people a small electric shock. In competition, the producers of Chamber of Horrors thought up the fear flasher and the horror horn to warn weak spirits when a nasty moment was coming.

The Glass Key.
Dashiell Hammett's novel of a politician saved from a murder charge has been turned into two lively thrillers, in 1935 with George Raft and Claire Dodd and directed by Frank Tuttle, and in 1942 with Alan Ladd and Veronica Lake, directed by Stuart Heisler.

Godzilla.
A Japanese monster creation first seen in the film of that name in 1955. Apparently closely related to Tyrannosaurus rex, he has since suffered at the hands of King Kong and the Thing in inferior sequels. He remained rather plainly a man in a rubber suit. The Japanese killed off Godzilla in 1995, but the lizard king was revived by the US in 1998, with Roland Emmerich's Godzilla, a big-budget movie that failed to generate much excitement.

The Golem.

This legend of a clay monster being brought to life by a rabbi to save persecuted Jews was first filmed in 1914; a classic version followed in 1920, written and directed by Henrik Galeen and Paul Wegener, who also played the Golem. Brilliant Grimm-like medieval sets, photographed by Karl Freund, make the second part of the film still fresh and both in detail and general development it was closely copied in Frankenstein 31. The story was remade in France in 1936 (with Harry Baur) and in Czechoslovakia in 1953, and in 1922 a British film called It borrowed the idea.

The Good Companions.

J.B. Priestley's sprawling comic novel of English life was filmed by Victor Saville in rather primitive style in 1932, but its very naiveté remains infectious, and there are attractive performances by Edmund Gwenn, Jessie Matthews, Max Miller and others. It was remade in 1957 by J. Lee-Thompson, with Eric Portman and Janette Scott, with only fair success. A nine-hour TV version with music in 1980 missed the bus at every stop.

Goodbye Mr Chips.

This sentimental biography of a schoolmaster, from James Hilton's novel, was a highly successful product of MGM's short-lived British studio under Michael Balcon (1937-39), directed by Sam Wood and enhanced by a brilliant performance from Robert Donat (AA). It was remade in 1969 as an overlong and lifeless semi-musical starring Peter O'Toole (AAN), directed by Herbert Ross; in 1983 as a six-part BBC TV serial, with Roy Marsden; and in 2002 as a TV movie starring Martin Clunes.

Goofy.

Dim-witted, optimistic, enthusiastic dog created by Walt Disney's animators in the 30s, with Art Babbitt contributing most to the development of his character. For much of his career, his voice was supplied by Pinto Colvig.

Goofy and Wilbur 39. The Art of Skiing 41. How to Swim 42. How to Play Football (AAN) 44. Hockey Homicide 45. Foul Hunting 47. Goofy Gymnastics 47. How to Ride a Horse 50. Two-Gun Goofy 52. How to Sleep 53. Aquamania 61. Goofy's Freeway Trouble 65. A Goofy Movie 95, etc.

governesses have most frequently been personified by Deborah Kerr: in The King and I, The Innocents, and The Chalk Garden. Julie Andrews runs a close second with Mary Poppins and The Sound of Music; as does Bette Davis with All This and Heaven Too and The Nanny. Joan Fontaine's contribution to the gallery was Jane Eyre, and Susannah York later trod in her footsteps. She was followed by Charlotte Gainsbourg in 1996, while Minnie Driver played a slight and not very interesting variation on the theme of the governess in love with her master in The Governess 98. Jodi Foster was a prim Anna Leonowens in Anna and the King 99 (which was The King and I without songs).

Grand Hotel.

The Hollywood all-star film par excellence and an Oscar-winner as best film of 1932, from Vicki Baum's novel. Directed by Edmund Golding, it allowed effective parts for Garbo, the Barrymore brothers, Joan Crawford, and Wallace Beery. It was remade in 1945 as Weekend at the Waldorf with no impact whatsoever. A 1959 West German remake, Menschen im Hotel, had Michele Morgan in Garbo's role and O.W. Fischer in John Barrymore's.

The Great Adventure.

Arnold Bennett's play and novel, Buried Alive, about a famous painter who assumes the identity of his valet and falls in love, was first filmed in England in 1915 with Henry Ainley in the lead. It was remade in America in 1921 with Lionel Barrymore; in 1933 came His Double Life with Roland Young and Lillian Gish as the lovers. The best version, emphasizing the comedy and retitled Holy Matrimony, came in 1943, directed by John Stahl, with a script by Nunnally Johnson, and pairing Monty Woolley with Gracie Fields.

The Great Gatsby.

F. Scott Fitzgerald's mordant story of an ex-gangster who meets his death among the Long Island high-livers was filmed in 1926 with Warner Baxter, in 1949 with Alan Ladd, and in 1974 with Robert Redford. The first was by all accounts the most successful, the second being merely surprising for biting off more than it could chew, and the third swamped by decoration and overlength. A TV movie, also released on video, appeared in 2000 with Toby Stephens.

The Great Impersonation.

E. Phillips Oppenheim's cunningly constructed spy thriller was filmed in 1921 with James Kirkwood; in 1935 with Edmund Lowe; and in 1942 with Ralph Bellamy.

Green Hornet, The.

A masked crime-fighter, who used a gas gun to incapacitate criminals, on US radio 36-52, and hero of the film serials The Green Hornet 40, starring Gordon Jones, and The Green Hornet Strikes Again 41, starring Warren Hull. A TV series 66-67 starred Van Williams and featured Bruce Lee as his Japanese assistant, Kato. The Green Hornet, otherwise Britt Reid, was the nephew of John Reid, better known as The Lone Ranger; both were creations of radio producer George W. Trendle and writer Fran Striker.

that French instrument of execution, cast its shadow over a variety of films including Marie Antoinette, A Tale of Two Cities, Uncertain Glory, The Scarlet Pimpernel, and Mad Love. The Carry On gang managed to make fun with it in Don't Lose Your Head. Private guillotines were employed for diabolical purposes in The Mystery of the Wax Museum, House of Wax, Chamber of Horrors and Two on a Guillotine. The plot of Patrice Leconte's La Veuve de Saint-Pierre revolved around a condemned murderer in a remote French colony awaiting the arrival from overseas of a guillotine for his execution.

Gulliver's Travels.

Jonathan Swift's savage allegory was naturally seen by Hollywood as merely a child's fantasy. Max Fleischer's 1939 feature cartoon seemed at the time to have as much charm and skill as a Disney production, but it has worn disappointingly. Jack Sher's 1960 live-action version, The Three Worlds of Gulliver, had neat trick-work but a less than absorbing screenplay. Peter Hunt's 1977 version had Richard Harris as Gulliver in an otherwise lacklustre animated film. A big-budget TV mini-series, starring Ted Danson and many special effects, was broadcast in 1995.

Gunfight at the OK Corral.

The celebrated, if semi-legendary, confrontation between Wyatt Earp and the Clanton Gang in 1881 at Tombstone, Arizona has been filmed several times, notably in the film of the same name in 1957, with Burt Lancaster as Earp and Kirk Douglas as Doc Holliday, roles played in My Darling Clementine 46 by Henry Fonda and Victor Mature, in Tombstone 94 by Kurt Russell and Val Kilmer, and in Wyatt Earp 94 by Kevin Costner and Dennis Quaid. Randolph Scott also played Earp in an earlier version, Frontier Marshal 39, and the TV series Wyatt Earp starred Hugh O'Brian.

Gunga Din.

Rudyard Kipling's narrative poem of the north-west frontier was rewritten in 1939 by Joel Sayre and Fred Guiol as a rousing combination of high adventure and barrack-room comedy, directed by George Stevens and starring Douglas Fairbanks Jnr, Cary Grant, and Victor McLaglen. In 1951, Soldiers Three, directed by Tay Garnett with Stewart Granger, David Niven, and Walter Pidgeon, amounted almost to a remake; while in 1961 John Sturges directed Frank Sinatra, Dean Martin, and Peter Lawford in a pastiche called Sergeants Three, set in the American West.

gypsies

have not been a favourite subject for movies but glamorized versions have turned up in Gypsy Wildcat, Golden Earrings, Caravan, Hot Blood, and The Man in Grey. Something closer to the real thing, perhaps, was on view in Sky West and Crooked, The Gypsy and the Gentleman, and Alex and the Gypsy, while TV failed to get going a gypsy detective series called Roman Grey. The screen's most memorable gypsy was probably Maria Ouspenskaya as Maleva in The Wolf Man and Frankenstein Meets the Wolf Man. The most authentic were probably in Hungary's I Even Met Happy Gypsies. Emir Kusturica's Time of the Gypsies/Dom Za Vesanje 90 was the first feature to be made in Romany, the Gypsy language, which also featured in his Black Cat, White Cat 98, set among gypsies along the Danube.

Hamlet.

William Shakespeare's play of an enigmatic prince slow to revenge his father's death has been filmed many times. Among the 19 silent versions are two female Hamlets, from Sarah Bernhardt in 1900, and from Asta Nielsen in 1920, as well as one by the leading Shakespearean actor of his time, Johnston Forbes-Robertson, in 1913. Laurence Olivier's 1948 version remains the most celebrated, winning Oscars for the best film, for him as best actor, for Roger Furse's art direction and costume design, and for Carmen Dillon's set decoration. A powerful Russian version appeared in 1964, starring Innokenti Smoktunovsky, directed by Grigori Kozintsev, and with music by Shostakovich. Nicol Williamson starred in an uneven version, directed by Tony Richardson, in 1969, and Mel Gibson took the role under Franco Zeffirelli's direction, in a version aimed at a young audience, in 1991. Kenneth Branagh directed and starred in a four hour version, using an uncut text, in 1996. The role has been notably played on TV by Richard Chamberlain 70, Ian McKellen 72, and Derek Jacobi 80. The play's plot also turns up in Akira Kurosawa's The Bad Sleep Well 60, a story of corporate corruption, a western, Johnny Hamlet 72, and Aki Kaurismäki's Hamlet Goes Business 87, set in the rubber duck industry. Michael Almereyda's modern-dress version in 2000, with Ethan Hawke in the title role, followed Kaurismäki's example, by setting the conflict in New York's corporate world.

“ It's undoubtedly the greatest part ever written, but it's so complex. You can't really play it, you just give an opinion of it. – Robert Stephens hands.

The clutching hand was long a staple of melodrama; usually hairy, with long fingernails, it came out of shadowed panelling and menaced the heroine in hundreds of thrillers such as The Cat and the Canary. Severed hands were also a favourite: passing fancies in most of the mummy films, they received more detailed attention in The Beast with Five Fingers, Chamber of Horrors, The Hand, and the various versions of The Hands of Orlac.

The Hands of Orlac.

Maurice Renard's novel about a concert pianist whose hands are crushed in an accident and replaced by those of a murderer has been filmed three times, the first as a German silent in 1926. The best version is Mad Love, directed by Karl Freund for MGM in 1935, starring Colin Clive. It was remade by Edmond T. Gréville as The Hands of Orlac in 1960, starring Mel Ferrer.

Harry Callahan.

The tough, maverick cop who imposes his own law and order on the world has been played by Clint Eastwood in five films: Dirty Harry 71, Magnum Force 73, The Enforcer 76, Sudden Impact 83, The Dead Pool 88. He made famous the phrase 'Make my day', addressed as a dare to a crook about to go for his gun. Other dialogue, from Dirty Harry (uncredited addition by John Milius to the script by Harry Julian Fink, Rita M. Fink, Dean Riesner):

“ I know what you're thinking, punk. You're thinking, Did he fire six shots or only five? Now to tell you the truth I've forgotten myself in all this excitement. But being this is a .44 Magnum, the most powerful handgun in the world, and will blow your head clean off, you've got to ask yourself a question: Do I feel lucky? Well, do you, punk?

Harry Palmer

was a British agent created by novelist Len Deighton as the antithesis of the sophisticated James Bond. On screen he was incarnated by Michael Caine in The Ipcress File 65, Funeral in Berlin 66 and Billion Dollar Brain 67. Caine later returned to play Palmer in two much lesser movies Bullet to Beijing 95 and Midnight in St Petersburg 95.

Harry Potter.

The adventures of an orphaned boy who discovers that he is a wizard and is whisked off to a magical place of learning that resembles an old-fashioned English public boarding school have been a publishing and cinematic phenomenon. Rights to J. K. Rowling's then five best-selling novels were bought by Warners with the intention of filming one a year. After the first two were among the highest-grossing movies so far made, their director Chris Columbus bowed out, exhausted, to become the producer of the third film. The relatively slow speed with which the films have been made has meant that the young cast has occasionally grown restive, as well as maturing faster than their characters. Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix will be released on film in 2007 with the sixth episode Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince still to come.

Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone/ Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone 01. Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets 02. Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban 04. Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire 05. Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix 07.

The Haunting

which was based on Shirley Jackson's chilling novel The Haunting of Hill House was first filmed in 1963 by Robert Wise. It was remade, less effectively, in 1999 by Jan de Bont.

restricted in scope, have been put to sound dramatic use in two films about helicopter services, Battle Taxi and Flight from Ashiya; while their potential for thrill sequences was well explored in The Bridges at Toko-Ri, Experiment in Terror, From Russia with Love, Arabesque, Caprice, You Only Live Twice, The Satan Bug, Fathom, The Las Vegas Story, Where Eagles Dare, Masquerade, Tarzan in the Valley of Gold, That Riviera Touch, The Wrecking Crew, Figures in a Landscape, Birds of Prey, Breakout, Russian Roulette and Apocalypse Now. TV series on the subject include Chopper One, Chopper Squad, Riptide, Blue Thunder and Air Wolf.

has been used more figuratively than realistically in movies; but what passed for the real thing did appear in Dante's Inferno, Heaven Can Wait, Hellzapoppin and Angel on My Shoulder, not to mention a Sylvester cartoon called Satan's Waitin'.

Henry Aldrich.

The accident-prone American teenager of the 40s series derived from Clifford Goldsmith's play What a Life, which was filmed in 1939 with Jackie Cooper in the role. Life with Henry, again with Cooper, followed in 1941, owing to the popularity of the radio series featuring Ezra Stone, who had played the part on Broadway. The series proper starred Jimmy LYDON, with Charles SMITH as his friend Dizzy. Goldsmith then created The Aldrich Family, a TV situation comedy that ran from 1949-53, in which Henry was played by Robert Casey, Richard Tyler, Henry Girard, Kenneth Nelson and Bobby Ellis.

Hercule Poirot.

Agatha CHRISTIE's short, fussy, fiercely moustachioed Belgian detective was first played by the tall, clean-shaven Austin TREVOR in Alibi 31, Black Coffee 31, Lord Edgware Dies 34; Tony RANDALL was closer to Christie's creation in the otherwise dull The Alphabet Murders 66; Albert FINNEY received an Oscar nomination for his performance in the big-budget Murder on the Orient Express 74, which was the best of the Poirot films; Peter USTINOV took the role in Death on the Nile 78 and Evil under the Sun 82. He was first portrayed on stage by Francis L. SULLIVAN in 1940. On television, David SUCHET has made the role his own in the series Poirot since 1989.

High Sierra

W. R. BURNETT's thriller has similarities to his The Asphalt Jungle, concerned as both are with a criminal planning one last, major robbery. It has been filmed three times by Warner Brothers: the best version was the first, directed by Raoul WALSH in 1941, which gave Humphrey BOGART his first star role; Walsh directed a western remake in 1949, starring Joel MCCREA; Stuart HEISLER returned to the original in the 1955 remake I Died a Thousand Deaths, starring Jack PALANCE, which Burnett also scripted.

hillbillies

became a stereotype of the 30s cinema, and subsequently made infrequent appearances before the enormous success of the TV series The Real McCoys 57-62 and The Beverly Hillbillies 62-70. Notable hillbillies through the years include the Kettles, Lum and Abner, the Weaver Brothers and Elviry; the Ritz Brothers in Kentucky Moonshine; Annie in Annie Get Your Gun; and the characters in Roseanna McCoy, Thunder Road, Li'l Abner, Guns in the Afternoon, Feudin' Fussin' and A-Fightin', The Moonshine War, I Walk the Line, and Coming Round the Mountain; while the denizens of Tobacco Road, geographically not hillbillies, splendidly personified the image. Cartoon-wise, Elmer Fudd in the Bugs Bunny series is an old-fashioned hillibilly, and Disney produced a twenty-minute version of The Martins and the McCoys, followed in 1975 by a TV movie, The Hatfields and the McCoys. In 1980 Coal Miner's Daughter brought to general notice the rags-to-riches story of singer Loretta LYNN, and in 1983 Cheryl LADD plumbed a similar milieu in a TV movie, Kentucky Woman.

Hollywood.

The American film city, nominally a suburb of Los Angeles, was founded in 1912 when a number of independent producers headed west from New York to avoid the effects of a patents trust. The site was chosen because of its nearness to the Mexican border in case of trouble, and because the weather and location possibilities were excellent. By 1913 it was established as the film-maker's Mecca.

Hollywood has naturally been a subject of perennial fascination to film-makers. Apart from star biopics and documentaries, among the most entertaining have been: Singin' in the Rain, about the transition from silents to sound, Sunset Boulevard, on those who found the transition difficult, Preston STURGES' Sullivan's Travels, The Big Knife, with Rod STEIGER as a movie mogul in the style of Harry COHN, Inside Daisy Clover, about a young actress in 30s Hollywood, The Day of the Locust, from Nathaniel WEST's dark novel, Good Morning Babylon, on the craftsmen behind Griffith's Intolerance, The Big Picture, about a young director at the mercy of rapacious producers, Robert ALTMAN's satirical The Player, Matinee, with its gimmick-laden producer in the manner of William CASTLE, Barton Fink, with its highbrow author drowning in the shallows of Hollywood, Living in Oblivion, on the perils of independent film-making with a egocentric star, Swimming with Sharks, on the ways of megalomaniac producers, Get Shorty, which finds little to distinguish a gangland debt-collector from a cheapskate director and producer, Boogie Nights, on pornographic filming, and last and least An Alan Smithee Film: Burn Hollywood Burn, a bad film about bad film-making.

Books about individual stars, directors, studios and producers are listed under their entries, but those worth reading include: King Cohn (1967) by Bob Thomas; Memo from David O. Selznick (1972) by Rudy Behlmer; and David O. Selznick's Hollywood (1980) by Ronald Haver; Showman: The Life of David O. Selznick (1993) by David Thomson; Goldwyn (1989) by A. Scott Berg; Frank Capra: The Catastrophe of Success (1992) by Joseph McBride; Merchant of Dreams: Louis B. Mayer, M.G.M., and the Secret Hollywood (1993) by Charles Higham.

❝ The legendary film city - sometimes referred to as Sodom-by-the-Sea - seems far from glamorous to the casual visitor. Geographically, it is not a city at all but a mere suburban segment of a forty-mile-square jigsaw puzzle of dormitory areas which all run into each other. James Gleason, Dorothy Parker, and several other people are credited with calling Los Angeles:

Seventy-two suburbs in search of a city.

No matter who said it, it's still true. L.A. also remains a supreme example of man's inhumanity to man, the promised land that only humans have polluted. Even before the glorious climate was filtered through several layers of smog, the values were all wrong. The residents were almost all on the run from somewhere else, and tended to idle their lives away under the sun, pursuing the buck when they could and taking the biggest for the best. Ethel Barrymore's first impressions, in 1932, were vivid:

The people are unreal. The flowers are unreal, they don't smell. The fruit is unreal, it doesn't taste of anything. The whole place is a glaring, gaudy, nightmarish set, built up in the desert.

The heat, the richness and the sweet smells are certainly enervating. Shirley Maclaine, hot from Broadway, saw the difference at once:

The most important deals in the movie industry are finalized on the sun-drenched turf of golf courses or around turquoise swimming pools, where the smell of barbecue sauce is borne on gentle breezes and wafts over the stereo system of houses that people seldom leave.

Cedric Hardwicke felt the danger:

God felt sorry for actors, so he gave them a place in the sun and a swimming pool. The price they had to pay was to surrender their talent.

There's always a price tag. Fred Allen knew it when he said:

California is a great place ... if you happen to be an orange.

Someone else called it 'Siberia with palms'. Raymond Chandler aptly summed up L.A. as:

A city with all the personality of a paper cup.

Joe Frisco thought of it as:

The only town in the world where you can wake up in the morning and listen to the birds coughing in the trees.

Stephen Vincent Benet was even more picturesque:

Of all the Christbitten places in the two hemispheres, this is the last curly kink in the pig's tail.

Hollywood is superior to other parts of L.A. only by virtue of the dusty hills into which it nestles on its northern side. The fact that most comments on it are cynical seems inevitable in an industrial area where the product is an intangible dream. Human beings must get injured in the process, their souls bruised by the struggle for fame, their bodies tossed onto the junkheap the minute they pass their prime. Hollywood has always sought, and then misused, the services of great talent. In the early 30s so many New York actors and writers made the four-day train journey and shortly returned in dejection that a saying sprang up on Broadway:

Never buy anything in Hollywood that you can't put on the Chief.

Billie Burke, a longtime resident, declared that:

To survive there, you need the ambition of a Latin-American revolutionary, the ego of a grand opera tenor, and the physical stamina of a cow pony.

Moss Hart called Beverly Hills:

The most beautiful slave quarters in the world.

Nelson Algren had a brief but unhappy experience:

I went out there for a thousand a week, and I worked Monday and I got fired Wednesday. The fellow who hired me was out of town Tuesday.

Walter Pidgeon liked the system:

It was like an expensive, beautifully-run fan club. You didn't need to carry money. Your face was your credit card - all over the world.

But Dorothy Parker saw its dangers:

Hollywood money isn't money. It's congealed snow.

Hedda Hopper put it another way:

Our town worships success, the bitch goddess whose smile hides a taste for blood.

John Huston saw through the illusion:

Hollywood has always been a cage ... a cage to catch our dreams.

George Jean Nathan gave the most all-embracing description:

Ten million dollars worth of intricate and ingenious machinery functioning elaborately to put skin on baloney.

Oscar Levant was bitter:

Strip the phoney tinsel off Hollywood and you'll find the real tinsel underneath.

Wilson Mizner thought it:

A trip through a sewer in a glass-bottomed boat,

A sewer with service from the Ritz Carlton.

Dudley Field Malone found it:

A town where inferior people have a way of making superior people feel inferior.

Elinor Glyn in 1927 wondered:

Where else in the world will you find a coloured cook bursting into the dining room to say 'You folks better hustle to dinner if you don't want the stuff to get cold'?

H.L. Mencken marvelled at its reputation:

Immorality? Oh, my God, Hollywood seemed to me to be one of the most respectable towns in America. Even Baltimore can't beat it.

Leo Rosten saw its lotus-land attraction:

Fortunes were made overnight, and along with the speculators, the oil men and the real estate promoters, another group came to the promised land - the old, the sick and the middle-aged, who came not to woo Mammon but to sit out their savings in the sun and die in the shadow of an annuity and an orange tree.

Herman Weinberg saw the dangers:

Whatever goes into the Hollywood grist mill, it comes out the same way. It is a meat-grinder that will take beef and suet, pheasant and turnips, attar of roses and limburger and turn it all into the same kind of hash that has served so many so well for so long.

To Ginger Rogers,

Hollywood is like an empty wastebasket.

To John Schlesinger,

An extraordinary kind of temporary place.

To Carrie Fisher,

You can't find true affection in Hollywood because everyone does the fake affection so well.

To Sylvester Stallone,

The only way to be a success in Hollywood is to be as obnoxious as the next guy.

To Rod Steiger,

A community of lonely people searching for even the most basic kind of stimulation in their otherwise mundane lives.

To Groucho Marx,

It provided the kind of luxury that exists today only for the sons of Latin-American dictators.

To Marilyn Monroe,

A place where they pay you 50,000 dollars for a kiss and 50 cents for your soul.

To Rex Reed,

A place where, if you don't have happiness, you send out for it.

Elinor Glyn was waspish about it:

When I arrived, spittoons were still being placed in rows down the centre of a set which was supposed to be the baronial hall of an old English castle.

Lana Turner survived the dream:

It was all beauty and it was all talent, and if you had it they protected you.

Josef Von Sternberg was downright cynical:

You can seduce a man's wife there, rape his daughter and wipe your hands on his canary, but if you don't like his movie, you're dead.

Lauren Bacall spoke from other people's experience:

The only place in the world where an amicable divorce means that each gets fifty per cent of the publicity.

Evelyn Keyes recalled:

The big studios were each headed by a Big Daddy who reigned supreme.

Louis Sherwin remembered:

They knew only one word of more than one syllable, and that was FILLUM.

Wilson Mizner, in similar vein:

What I like about Hollywood is that you can get along knowing only two words of English: swell and lousy.

He added:

I spent several years there, and I think all the heroes are in the audience.

An anonymous wag called it:

Paradise with a lobotomy.

But for Joseph L. Mankiewicz it had saving graces, in the 30s at least:

The old moguls were really impressed to know that Lion Feuchtwanger and Aldous Huxley and Thomas Mann were living in Pacific Palisades. They reached for things in those days. Even Bernard Shaw came out to look around. I don't think he'd come today.

Ernst Lubitsch saw another danger, that the dream might be dangerously more attractive than reality:

I've been to Paris France and I've been to Paris Paramount. Paris Paramount is better.

Some failed to relish the easy life. After a short stay in 1932 Sergei Eisenstein packed his bags. When asked at the station 'Are you coming back?' he replied:

No, I'm going back.

And an anonymous wag complained:

In Hollywood you can be forgotten while you're out of the room going to the toilet.

F. Scott Fitzgerald was whimsical about it:

I accepted the assignment with the resignation of a ghost assigned to a haunted house.

A character in Gavin Lambert's The Slide Area had a different slant:

The past is out of place here, mister. You don't feel it, you only feel the future.

To Grover Jones it was:

The only asylum run by the inmates.

Walter Winchell called it:

A town that has to be seen to be disbelieved.

And Marlon Brando dismissed it as:

A cultural boneyard.

Ken Murray loved it, but admitted it to be:

A place where you spend more than you make, on things you don't need, to impress people you don't like.

Ethel Barrymore was finally repelled:

It looks, it feels, as though it had been invented by a Sixth Avenue peepshow man.

And Sonny Fox summed it all up:

Hollywood is like a world's fair that's been up a year too long.

All such remarks spring mainly from the system. But perhaps the people were partly to blame.

I'll miss Hollywood. Of the twenty friends I thought I had, I'll miss the six I really had, remarked Lauren Bacall wryly on her way to Broadway. And Errol Flynn once said:

They've great respect for the dead in Hollywood, but none for the living.

Richard Burton responded frankly to a question about Hollywood morals:

Certainly most movie executives were making love to starlets. But then, so were most of us actors.

Alfred Hitchcock, on the other hand, maintained:

We lead a very suburban life here. We're in bed by nine o'clock every night.

And that reminds one of the anonymous 30s complaint about Hollywood's fabled social life:

No matter how hot it gets during the day, there's nothing to do at night.

Anonymous too was the mogul-hater who averred:

There's nothing wrong with the place, that six first-class funerals wouldn't cure.

Nepotism was of course rife. When Louis B. Mayer appointed his daughter's husband William Goetz to a key position at MGM, someone cracked:

The son-in-law also rises.

And Ogden Nash devised a famous couplet about the head of Universal:

Uncle Carl Laemmle
Has a very large faemmle.

Ethics were out, as Dorothy Parker knew:

The only-ism Hollywood believes in is plagiarism.

Glamour and insincerity gave it the atmosphere of a luxury liner, as someone said in the 30s:

I have this terrible apprehension that suddenly the boat is going to dock and I shall never see any of you again.

Phyllis Batelli called it:

A place where great-grandmothers dread to grow old.

And there's an old saying:

In Hollywood the eternal triangle consists of an actor, his wife and himself.

They shoot too many pictures and not enough actors.

One can hardly be surprised that people are false when the movies themselves were sham for so many years. Arthur Freed produced the Scottish fantasy Brigadoon on the MGM lot and defended himself by saying:

I went to Scotland and found nothing there that looks like Scotland.

A wise saying of Hollywood's heyday, by David O. Selznick:

Nothing here is permanent. Once photographed, life here is ended.

But the system had its rueful supporters. Orson Welles:

Hollywood's all right: it's the pictures that are bad.

Raymond Chandler:

If my books had been any worse I should not have been invited to Hollywood, and if they had been any better I should not have come.

An anonymous writer:

They ruin your stories. They trample on your pride. They massacre your ideas. And what do you get for it? A fortune.

Typically, Hollywood was often ignorant of the talent it had bought. Bert Lahr didn't make it until his third trip, and said wryly:

If you want to be a success in Hollywood, be sure and go to New York.

Richard Dyer McCann wrote truthfully:

The most familiar, solid, bedrock certainty in Hollywood is sudden change.

Certainly, the town depended on fashion, and its well-set ways were in themselves a mere fashion. By 1956, David Selznick found the place to be:

Like Egypt, full of crumbled pyramids.

Fred Allen had said in 1941 that:

Hollywood is a place where people from Iowa mistake each other for stars.

In the 50s the mistake became pardonable: male leads were required to look less like matinée idols and more like the slob next door, or the fellow at the gas station. Humphrey Bogart was heard to remark:

I came out here with one suit and everybody said I looked like a bum. Twenty years later Marlon Brando comes out with only a sweatshirt and the town drools over him. That shows you how much Hollywood has progressed.

Hollywood was desperate in the face of TV and better living standards. One trend followed another: in the 60s, for instance, English actors became more fashionable than ever before, and Bob Hope quipped:

There'll always be an England, even if it's in Hollywood.

By the end of the 60s the old complaints were being repeated with a new veneer of resigned cynicism. Paul Mayersberg:

The desert of Southern California cannot be said to have created a religion, but it has contributed greatly to the development of a way of life that operates at the extremity of our civilization. When you reach Los Angeles you are as far West as you can go.

An anonymous agent:

You fail upwards here. A guy makes a ten-million-dollar picture, the thing is not that he's made a bomb [i.e. disaster] but that he's made a ten-million-dollar picture. So next time out, they give him a twelve-million-dollar picture.

David Mamet thought that only one rule governed the place:

Hollywood is the city of the modern gold rush, and money calls the tune. That is the first and last rule, as we know, of Hollywood - we permit ourselves to be treated like commodities in the hope that we may, one day, be treated like valuable commodities.

Whether Hollywood finally succeeds or goes under, it has had a fair run, long enough to confound two doubting remarks of 1915, by Carl Laemmle:

I hope I didn't make a mistake coming out here.

And D. W. Griffith:

It's a shame to take this country away from the rattlesnakes. Perhaps the rattlesnakes are just biding their time.

Hollywood on film has generally been shown as the brassy, gold-digging, power-conscious society which, in the nature of things, it can hardly fail to be. There was a somewhat sentimental period in the 20s and 30s, with Ella Cinders, Hollywood, Going Hollywood, Hollywood Cavalcade, and Hollywood Boulevard; but satire had already struck in such films as The Last Command, Merton of the Movies, Show People, The Lost Squadron, What Price Hollywood, LadyKiller, Something to Sing About, Once in a Lifetime, Stardust, Hollywood Hotel, Stand In, A Star Is Born and Boy Meets Girl. The moguls didn't seem to mind the film city being shown as somewhat zany, as in The Goldwyn Follies, Disney's Mother Goose Goes Hollywood, The Cohens and Kellys in Hollywood, Abbott and Costello in Hollywood, The Jones Family in Hollywood, Movie Crazy, Never Give a Sucker an Even Break, and Hellzapoppin; but they preferred the adulatory attitude best expressed in The Youngest Profession, which concerned the autograph hunters who lay in wait at the studio exits.

During the 40s Paramount was the studio most addicted to showing itself off, though the front office can't have relished watching Preston Sturges bite the hand that fed him in Sullivan's Travels. The story of Hold Back the Dawn was supposedly told to sentimental Mitchell Leisen during a lunch break on the studio floor; Crosby and Hope based a score of gags on Paramount; and the studio was the setting for Star Spangled Rhythm, an all-star musical which encouraged other studios to emulate it, with Warner's Thank Your Lucky Stars and It's a Great Feeling, Universal's Follow the Boys, the independent Stage Door Canteen, and later Paramount's less successful reprise, Variety Girl.

In 1950 Sunset Boulevard took a really sardonic look at the film city, and set a fashion for scathing movies like The Star, The Bad and the Beautiful, The Barefoot Contessa and The Big Knife. As though to atone, almost every studio threw in a light-hearted, nostalgic look at Hollywood's golden era: Singin' in the Rain, The Perils of Pauline, Jolson Sings Again, The Eddie Cantor Story. But in the last few years the only really affectionate review of Hollywood's past has been in the Cliff Richard musical Wonderful Life, though Jerry Lewis continued to paint zany pictures of studio life in The Errand Boy, The Ladies' Man and The Patsy. The rest was all denunciation and bitterness: Hollywood Boulevard, Hollywood Story, The Wild Party, The Day of the Locust, Inserts, The Goddess, Two Weeks in Another Town, The Carpetbaggers, Harlow, Inside Daisy Clover, The Loved One, Whatever Happened to Baby Jane, The Legend of Lylah Clare, Myra Breckinridge, The Oscar and the satiric The Player. A 1969 TV series, Bracken's World, was set in a film studio (Twentieth Century-Fox) and saw it as a kind of valley of the dolls – and the studio scenes in that movie were none too convincing.

See the book by Rudy Behlmer and Tony Thomas: 1975, Hollywood's Hollywood, the Movies about the Movies.
